The "common right," says Mr. King, "requires a statement from the new prime minister, that he is preparing for a general election." No such common right apparently existed when Sir John Abbott succeeded Sir John Macdonald as prime minister, or when Sir John Thompson succeeded Sir John Abbott. That a change in the premiership dissolves parliament is a new discovery and must rely for support, if support it has, upon the theory that the present house of commons is holding on to office beyond the term .or which it was elected.
