Those Childhood Scenes
He had asked an unsuspecting friend to take a cross-country walk, and had planned a route that ran through the long-unvisited scenes of his childhood.
His fond recollection presented every last one of them to view—the orchard, the meadow, the deep-tangled wildwood, and every loved spot which his infancy knew.
Finally he pointed to a very small mud pond.
"Would you believe it, when I was a boy I used to bathe in that mud-hole!"
"Yes," answered his friend wearily, "and it doesn't look as though they had changed the water since!"

Dear Auntie Mabel had sent the three Morgan children a very beautiful integral fruit cake made of sugar and nicely colored.
"Now you really mustn't eat them, you know," explained mother in a last desperate effort. "The look awfully pretty, but I'm not sure that the coloring may not be dangerous. In fact," she went on, dropping her voice in an awesome whisper, "I have heard of children dying from eating colored things." She thought that would do the trick; but early next morning she heard a sound out on the landing, and, going to see what was afoot so early, found Elsie trotting along the passage.
"Where are you going, dear?" she asked. "It's not o'clock yet."
"Going to see if Dick and Arthur are dead yet," replied the 8-year-old miss.
"I'm not."
