French Armies Check Fresh German Advances

Paris, Aug. 9—The French War Department today gave out the following official statement:

"There was much going on last night in the Artois district. In the sector to the north of Arras, a German attack at a point north of the railroad station of Souchez was repulsed. In the sector of Neuville St. Vast, to the east of the road to Lille, the Germans, after exploding a mine, bombarded our positions violently and endeavored to come out from their trenches. They were at once checked by the fire of our infantry and our artillery.

"In the Argonne, not far from the road running from Vielnen-Le-Chateau to Binarville, the enemy last night delivered an attack on our advanced posts and trenches, making use of hand grenades and bombs. They were driven back to their lines by our fire.

"In the western section of the forest, which extends from Haule Chevachee to Vauquors, there was fighting with bombs, hand grenades and rifles which lasted a portion of the night.

"In the Vosges a fresh German attack against our positions on the Linge was delivered at about one o'clock in the morning but was a complete failure. A curtain of fire maintained by our troops inflicted perceptible losses on the enemy."

OLDTOWN DOCTOR HOME FROM WAR

Was With American Ambulance Corps in France

TELLS INTERESTING STORY

His Ideas of The French Soldier Revolutionized by His Experiences There — Something of The Grim Work Being Done

Dr. Edward M. Marquis, an Oldtown, Me., physician and surgeon, who set aside his practice and offered his services to the American Ambulance corps for the relief of the wounded in France during the fighting in the western theatre of the European war, has returned home and is full of the impressions that he has received during his stay from December to June.

One of the greatest impressions made upon his mind during his work of caring for the wounded French and English soldiers, brought to the hospital maintained by this American organization, was le remarkable, even marvelous physique of the French soldier and his extraordinary reconstructive powers. He says that he has seen soldiers come into the hospital with legs and thighs shattered absolutely, cases which, not so long ago, the surgeons would give scarcely a second thought as to ability to save the member. Bones would be protruding through the flesh and it would look altogether hopeless to try and save the leg. Added to the awfulness of the wound itself, would be the infected condition of the wound, lying as the wounded ones must for days, sometimes, before removal to the hospital and the wound contaminated by contact with the contents of the trenches.

At first, the common custom was to cut off the leg or arm so mutilated and hope that careful nursing would restore the injured soldier to some degree of health. Today this is all changed. At first a man here and there, so badly hurt that an operation seemed impossible was let alone. To the amazement of the surgeons, these began shortly, under the skillful nursing, nourishing foods and careful bandaging, to improve somewhat and as the flesh healed, abcesses would form in the wound. Careful probing would discover this was caused by a loose piece of the bone and this was drawn out through the small incision necessary, the place cleansed of foreign matter and the healing process continue. After a while all these loose pieces would thus be removed, nature would replace the breaks in the bone by knitting the cracked portions together and instead of a helpless cripple, the men go forth whole, if not altogether as vigorous in the part originally injured, as before the hurt. Dr. Marquis has brought back some intensely interesting photographs, by x-ray and ordinary methods of photography, of the original condition and development of such an injury, the last showing him standing erect on both legs, although supporting his weakened frame by the use of a crutch. Eventualy he will be a well man, rather than a cripple.

It was thus with all, practically, who came to the hospital from the front, they showed wonderful powers of recuperation and their wounds were extraordinary in their readiness to heal. Dr. Marquis explained this by the fact that, in constant training as the men have been for almost a year, inured to hardship and carrying everywhere a load of about forty pounds on their backs, they have developed physically into fine specimens of manhood.

Another feature which appealed to him with great force, was the shattering of the reputation which the French have for a lightness, a frivolity of spirit, an effervescence which makes the national temperament seem rather on the surface. The excitability of the French soldier is a thing of the past, he declares. Cool, calm, never excited, they come to the hospital to receive treatment and accept whatever comes without a particle of that excitement of spirit which, we have always been taught, is a characteristic of the French people, particularly the Parisian. Even while in the hospital they do not talk, but lie silent, speaking only when spoken to, always ready perhaps to talk and no matter what their rank, never in the least degree snobbish. They are invariably pleasant to look after and show deep appreciation of every thing that is done for them, with an utter absence of fretfulness or fault-finding. They are appreciative, too, in fact, there is not a day goes by that they do not thank you for what you are doing, often many times a day, in thanks which show they are not mere politeness, a mechanical expression, but from the heart. This was a great satisfaction to all of the surgeons on duty, as it makes the work of relief so much pleasanter all round.

The forgetfulness of self in the need of the nation, is another feature that struck Dr. Marquis with tremendous force. There is absolutely no such thing apparent, at least throughout all Paris and so far as he had been able to venture, where there is not a deep spirit of personal readiness to give everything for the country's need. Not having sought the war, yet their spirit was that the war having been thrust upon them they were ready to give all, if needed, that the nation might be saved disaster. A universal spirit is abroad throughout France, to do what is necessary as individuals or as a nation to have the final victory. "We didn't want this war," they say, "but since the enemy is on our ground we go to any sacrifice to drive him away. Not one class or some classes but all classes are united in this great spirit of patriotism that sweeps the country.

All the able-bodied men have gone to war and the old men, young boys and the women are left to carry on the duties of civil life. Yet with all their deprivations there is no word of complaint, no "kicking" but everybody, young and old accepts the situation with the familiar laugh and remark, "C'est la guerre." It may be that a store keeper has not the article wanted, he or she, rather, smiles at the customer and says: 'It is the war," and though a dozen shops may be visited before the article is found, yet all have the same reply and one finds this spirit of tolerance everywhere.

The women collect the fares on the street cars although some men are in use at the motor. The women and boys till the fields and sow the crops, and everywhere throughout France, says Dr. Marquis the farms are blooming as if the men had never left them. Indeed, he says that the average garden and farm everywhere he went, looks as well, if not better, than those places which our American farmers cultivate so carefully for exhibition purposes. One would almost look for real neglect now, with all the men away but there is none of it.

He speaks of one acquaintance whom he met, a merchant of Paris, who at 70, has amassed a fortune and raised two sons, one an attorney, the other a soldier. One gave his life on the border, fighting to keep the Germans away from Paris and his beloved land, the other yielded up his life in the Dardanelles. Was he discouraged, did he speak sadly of the great loss in his declining years? Not a regret at the sacrifice not a word of rancor that both his boys had to do. On the contrary he remarked that he has bought him a sash and knife and that if he is needed, he can yet shoulder a musket and sight it at the enemy. He is constantly waiting for orders at 70 years, to fight for his country and he is, said Dr. Marquis, but an instance of the spirit of devotion and sacrifice that animates the nation.

The national need, too, has done much to elevate the tone of all classes morally, but more particularly those whom society commonly calls the outcasts. The woman of the street, even, has forsaken her ways and now turns her back on her former life. "I have work to do, work that must be done. It is no time for amusing onesself," is her reply to former boon companions. Everywhere this spirit of forgetting self is uppermost in the individual mind, as in the national and the effect is a France that is all but new.

Of news from the actual front, says Dr. Marquis, the French at least of Paris got even less than we hear in America. There is now and then, after a big battle, the statement that in such and such a battle so and so were killed wounded or missing. Never since the war began has the censor permitted the least whisper to leak out as to how many men have been sacrificed to the God of war, nor how many have been called to take their places.

But from officers, under treatment in the American hospital, there have been dropped little hints now and then when they have become friendly with the surgeons and attendants. One here has replaced his entire company three times since he went to the front, another twice and another only once, but that means an enormous drain on the nation.

This hospital, by the way, which is manned absolutely by American surgeons and nurses, paid for with American money, receives the free services of the best that America can send. For each period of three months a unit of surgeons and assistants, as it is called is provided by one of the great universities of the country, Harvard, Johns Hopkins, Chicago, etc, each taking its turn. During the period of service the entire staff is thus under one administration and direction.

The hospital can accommodate 600 patients and of course, only the number who leave the hospital determines the number which can be received from any trainload of injured coming from the front. Early in the war, after the battle of the Marne, for instance, Dr. Marquis says that perhaps 100 a day were received for a day or two, but in general about 20 a day can be taken in.

IMPERIAL THEATRE'S SPLENDID ARRAY

Tempting List of Features For The Whole Week

The Imperial Theatre has a most alluring series of features for its patrons this week. Tonight and tomorrow the Edison Co. will present a splendid story by the noted playwright, Lee Arthur, entitled "The Test." It will be contained in three acts and most elaborately produced. The Animated Weekly wil show Charles Becker and his wife and eight other news subjects. The comedies will be "He Could Not Explain" and "Clothes Make The Count," while a drama entitled "Andy of The Royal Mounted" featuring Gilbert M. Anderson, will complete the picture bill. The Oxford Four has been re-engaged for another week, because of their great popularity in this city. The orchestra, under Director Swornsbourne, has a most entertaining list of new numbers.

On Wednesday and Thursday Mary Pickford will come back to the Imperial curtain in the charming romantic comedy, "Such A Little Queen," written by Channing Pollock. Suffice to say, this is one of the prettiest pictures imaginable, a blithsome comedy-drama eminently suited to little Mary's peculiar talents. At the Thursday matinee splendid photographs of Mary Pickford will be given patrons.

On Friday and Saturday the "Black Box" will receive its grand windup presentation. The dense mystery surrounding the murderous hands and the relationship existing between Craig and the Professor will be fully explained. A big budget of surprises in this last episode.

WEALTHY MAN FROM VANCOUVER HELD UP BY U. S. AUTHORITIES

New York, Aug. 9—According to the Times this morning, William A. Anderson, a wealthy resident of Vancouver, B. C., who returned yesterday from England on the White Star Liner Lapland, was detained by the orders of the United States public health officials for examination by the medical board at Ellis Island today on account of his being a cripple and liable to become a public charge.

Immigration Inspector Snyder, who had the case, said he could do nothing in the matter, as Dr. Brooks of the Federal Service had ordered Mr. Anderson to be held for examination.

In his explanation to the immigration officer, Mr. Anderson said that he had been living in Vancouver for eighteen years and crossed to Liverpool sixteen months ago on the Baltic to have his right foot operated upon. While over there, owing to the dampness of the climate, he contracted rheumatism, which had settled in his right leg and crippled him so that he had to use crutches. He hoped to recover the use of his leg after he got back to the Pacific coast.

The passenger was indignant at first, when he was informed by the purser that he would have to remain on board all night and go to Ellis Island today for examination, but recovered his spirits with the hope that he would be released and permitted to start for Vancouver tonight. His baggage had been placed on the pier and examined, but on application being made to the customs official in charge, he was allowed to have it taken back to the ship for the night.

William H. Hanley's condition continues to improve, according to a report from the hospital.

CONSCIENCE AND ENLISTMENT

(Halifax Chronicle)

The appeal of the Empire has been and is solely to the conscience of its sons in all parts of the world.

But our young men must not for a moment get it into their heads that that they can recklessly or arbitrarily decide to go or stay as they please. There is such an all important thing as duty to be reckoned with. It may be man's imperative duty to stay at home, these times. He should make very certain, however that such is really his duty before finally deciding. On the face of things it is now the duty of every able-bodied young man who can properly get away from home, to volunteer for the front. There are no exceptions in this. The supreme British race appeal is is directly to the private conscience of every one of the race. It is the duty of every man to save another from death, or undeserved suffering, if he can. There is, admittedly, no law compelling one to rescue another from say drowning, at any personal risk. But who would care to stand before the bar of his own conscience after having permitted a fellow creature to drown without an effort to save him? What young man in Canada and more particularly in Nova Scotia, would care to face his own conscience hereafter should he disregard the appeal now being made to him, in a matter of life or death for the world-wide British people—his people and the sons and daughters of his forefathers, his national sisters and brothers?

And what if the young Canadian's own home and fireside should ultimately fall a prey to Hunnish barbarity, through his neglect of duty. This is a time when every man counts. All Britons now require that every man among them should do his duty.

Wise Man

An elderly gentleman of rural appearance had hardly seated himself in the crosstown car when a young lady who had followed him in approached him.

"Sir, did you lose a $5 bill?" she asked.

For a moment the farmer observed her with a surprised, curious look, then said, convincingly, "Yes ma'am, I did.

"Then there it is," said she handing the bill to him. "I picked it up behind you from the car floor."

"Thanks very much, young lady, for your honesty. This is a most remarkable happening."

"Oh, I don't think so, sir, I believe every one should return the money in such a case as this. What is there so remarkable about it?"

"Why I lost my $5 two years ago."

PICNIC AT ONONETTE ADDS $1,600 TO FUNDS

The large and energetic committee which had the Ononette fair in hand, and which successfully conducted it on Saturday afternoon and evening, has every reason to feel pleased with the results of its efforts. The splendid total of $1,600 was realized for patriotic purposes, the Red Cross, Patriotic and Soldiers' Comfort funds. A large gathering of people, about 1,800 attended, and the various games and booths were liberally patronized. The grounds given for the purpose by Mrs. O. H. Warwick were beautifully decorated, and when illuminated by electrics in the evening, appeared more attractive than ever. An auction sale of pies, conducted by S. C. Matthews, brought $110. A good programme of music was given by St. Mary's band. Fireworks added to the enjoyment of the night's programme, and it was well towards midnight when the pleasure seekers and tired committee-workers left the grounds.

HEAVY BATTERY AWAITS ORDERS

unharmed, the splinters of the shell flying over his head, is told in a letter written by Gunner Clarke, of Fredericton, formerly of the 23rd Battery of Field Artillery, and now with the 8th Battery, in Belgium.

The letter follows:

"I saw a great sight last night. I had just gone up to our guns when one of our aeroplanes that was observing over the German trenches was hit by one of the German anti-aircraft guns and was compelled to shut off his engine and glide down. In doing this he came very handy to the German trenches, and they welcomed him with both rifle and machine gun fire. it sounded like an attack, they fired so much. Anyway he had to descend, and he lit in a field in front of our guns. When he hit the ground he was traveling about twenty-five miles an hour, and went about thirty feet along the ground until he hit a hedge that was a few feet above the wood. When he finally brought up his aeroplane was resting on the propellor in front, and the tail was straight up in the air. The pilot stuck to the machine, but when the plant hit the hedge, the observer, who had been wounded in the leg, fell out and was quite badly shaken up. The Germans got the range after the machine had been there about two minutes, and they began to shell it. The shells were high explosives, and went about seventy-five or 100 yards too far, and didn't do much damage. When we thought they were all through shelling us, another fellow and I started to go with a team across the field, where the shells dropped. The Germans sent one over and it is a wonder to me they didn't get us. It broke about ten feet from the teamster's head, and I guess we were so close that the splinters of the shell went over our heads.

"Well, we are in Belgium now and it is a pretty nice country. There is a town here a little to our left that the Germans drop a few shells in every day, and this morning we saw them get a direct hit on the roof of a church. It is comparatively quiet along here now, but I don't know how long it will last. I went down to where the 48th Highlanders were last Sunday, looking for Percy Gough, but I couldn't find him. I saw Fred Wade and he told me Percy was with the 48th. All the Canadians are pretty well together."

"Now that the elections are over and the government so triumphantly sustained, my first attention as minister of public works will be the resumption of work on the new parliament buildings," said Hon. T. H. Johnston.

Premier Norris will return to Winnipeg Tuesday, and a reception is being organized by the Liberals.

CITY DID NOT OWN THE LOT.

An effort is being made by Commissioner Russell to adjust a difference in the matter of the sale of a lot to D. C. Clark in Duke street, Carleton. When Mr. Clark began to build upon the lot he found he was encroaching upon twenty-five feet of a neighbor's land. The records were consulted at City Hall and it now appears that the old common council sold to Mr. Clark something which the city did not own. It is expected that the matter will be arranged this week.
