

built a small house. There were so few settlers at that time that the houses though small took no little trouble to put up, but the same difficulty was not experienced next year, as the settlement increased rapidly. When he came he paid and got a deed for one of the lots, and paid part on the other two, an instalment; since that time he has paid money on the five lots.

When the spring came, or rather towards the commencement of summer, his money was exhausted, but the provisions bought were sufficient till the crops were ready. From the crops of oats and potatoes this season he made some money, and particularly as they were scarce, and a brisk demand by increased emigration and traffic by the main road. The land since that time has yielded sufficient, not only for support but for sale. His family have been industrious, and he has managed to be economical in every thing.

He has now a good stock of cattle: they had the first winter one cow, which gave milk till spring, when he bought another, and at the same time a yoke of working oxen. He has now one span of horses, one colt two years old, and another one year old, two yoke of working oxen, one yoke of five-year old steers, two yoke of two-year olds, three steers, seven cows, six calves, forty-six sheep, five year old heifers. He sold two cows the other day, and has during these some years past sold a good many cattle.

He has about 102 acres of cleared land. He had this year forty acres in hay, twenty in pasture, seventeen acres in wheat, fourteen acres in crops of oats, barley, &c., and ten acres in fallow. He has nearly ten acres of new land cleared this season for wheat. His home-made clothing or cloth last year was 106 yards, being woollen, cotton and wool, and flax, and expects this year to have 100 yards. He has a waggon and a cart, horse-sleigh and harness, fanning mill and other farming implements. His barn is a log one 74 x 26, stable 40 x 23, and other small buildings. His house is a two story log building with a brick chimney.

He states that all his neighbours have succeeded well. Many have emigrated this season from Glenquach, and expects that next year nearly all his old friends in the glen will be in Canada, and in this tract. A brother-in-law, who has been settled for
