The Adamantine Mind

Let the world change, I shall not change
Nor yield dominion of my mind,
But with ancestral freedom range
The mightier days behind.
Should statesmen abdicate control,
They who should rule be toppled down,
Naught can dethrone the regal soul,
Or rob it of its Crown.

Against the Adamantine will
Rebellion's billows vainly beat.
Let Insurrection rise and shrill,
And scared Authority retreat,
Conscience surveys the rabble-cries,
As mountains gaze on heaving main,
Unmoved among the loftier skies
By transient hurricane.

Be of good heart, then, wavering souls,
And stand upon the ancient ways:
The forward hours wise Tom controls
Are but as righted yesterdays.
When disaffection's storms are spent,
Authority resumes its rod
From continent to continent,
Under the Reign of God!

—ALFRED AUSTIN.
