We, who are living in this day of com-We, who are living in this day of com-forts and conveniences and are enjoying these benefits which contribute so materially to the hup, iness of life, do well to pause at times to do honor to those noble and courageous men and women, who, by heroically enduring the hardships and privations inevitally asso-ciated with pioneer life, have made this country, once densely covered with stur-dy forests, to blossom as the rose. Pos-sibly we too frequently fail to properly appreciate the self-sacrificing lives of those whose names do not appear in the annals of the nation, nor are written large in the press of the day, but who have been genuine heroes and heroines and have lived and passed on, leaving the country the richer for having lived. But few of the early pioneers of this community are left and their ranks are rapidly thinning out. On Monday, Feb. 11th, 1918, there passed away, in the person of Mrs. J. D. Damm of Alsfeldt, one of the earlies of these honored citi-zens. It was eminently fitting that she should depart this life in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Hy. Shortly after-ward they began farming, purchased 50 acres bushland, and e.ected a shanty. From this small and rude beginning they continued and succeded in acquiring material possessions above the ordinary. The deceased was a person possessed of fine talents. As a girl she was social-ly popular, had a sunny, vivacious dis-position and high ambitions. But long years spent in the remote seclusion of the backwoods, amid hard pioneer sur-roundings, with social and cultural op-portunities reduced to a minimum, under urgent necessity toolsconstantly year in and year out, under these most restrain-ing and almost crushing conditions the budding powers that lay dormant did not find natural development. hopeful girl became the quiet, unobstru-sive, unpretentious matron who spent her days in the hum drum routines of family duties, learning more and more to forget self and the high hopes and glory of a life mapped out in youth and learning to yield to the call which meant living solely for home and family. Be-cause of this she has not been known as the "Modern woman" gains recognition but nevertheless her life has meant a contribution of true and abiding value.
