"Is that your present system?" asked Sheridan.
"No, said the Director. 'At present we are on the other tack.'
"The Separate System was failure, then?' inquired Mr. Sheridan.
"Not a failure, sir, but it was abandoned out of regard to the sentimental reformers. It increased insanity from 12 to 31 per 1,000 Sir Joshua himself was the first to find it out.

"And then you adopted the Public Works System, did you not' asked Sheridan.
"No, not so soon. When his Seperate System failed, Sir Joshua in troduced the mask—a cloth skull cap coming down over the face, win, answered Sheridan in the prisoners. He was made a Knight Commander of the Bath for that wonderful invention.

"Then that system gave beneficial results?' inquired Mr. Sheridan.
"Weil there was no doubt of its moral excellence; but it increased the insanity from 31 to 39½ per 1,000 Sir Joshua himself was the first to distorted the mask of the service of t

Sir Joshua himself was the first to discovere this, also.'

'He certainly deserves the name of a discoverer,' thought Sheridan.

Then aloud,—
'And your present system is his invention, also?'

'Yes, our present system is wholly his. We are just now examining results. We discover one peculiarly, which Sir Joshua hardly knows how class, but he says it certainly is a proof of progress.'

May I ask what is this peculiarity?'

asked Sheridan.

'Thoroughly,' answered Lord Som.

"Au, sir, not of course," said Sir Joshua, in a tone of severe correction," a chapter of the Bible read by sarder every morning, in a regular way, many do some good; but these influences have been overrated—they are of the sentimental school. The quality that is absent in the criminal class is order, sir, order, and this can beat be supplied by persistent and impersonal regularity of work, meals, exercise, and sleep.

You subject all prisoners to the same course of treatment? asked Sheridan.

Precisely, answered Sir Joshua.

Our system in the measure of normal ity, sir. We make the entire criminal or obsoromal class shormal class pass through the same process of elevation, and try to reach one standard.

Mr. Sheridan would have asked what the standard was, and how many had reached it, and what had become of those who had failed to reach ir, who had sunk under the Draconian yoke; but the thought it prudent to keep the questions back.

Suppose a youth commit a first officier, the said, for a man hithered respectable and industrious commit crime in a moment of passion,—will you treat him as if he were a professional criminal?

"Precisely," repeated the eminent reformer, 'ur and justice. The criminal body is diseased—our system is the customer of the source of the source of the service of the 'May I ask what is this peculiarity?' inquired Mr. Sheridan.

'No, I don't think he can be forty—certainly not more—but a person of so much force, and with a manner to impressive, that really one forgets that decreased 2 per cent, answered the Director, 'while suicide has it—creased 17 per 1,000.' 'Sir Joshua inclines to the opinion, said another Director, who was listening, 'that this fact proves that we are at last getting to bear closely on the criminal principle. The law is touching it—there is no escape—and in despair the baffled criminals give up the fight, and kill themselves.

There was geomething 'fearfully repugnant to Sheridan's broad and humane view in all this, and he would gladly have escaped from the place. But the Director, when Mr. Wyville first appropriate that so old the continuation of the continuatio
