Roman Items.

(Special Correspondence the N. Y. Freeman's Journal.)

Rome, December 28.—One day, over two years ago, Vox Urbis had the good fortune to be in Venice, and actually on the great square of St. Mark's when the historic tower suddenly crashed to the earth after having served for six or seven centuries as one of the most striking monuments of Europe. Last summer, returning from the Tyrol, he stood again on the piazza and peered between the chinks of the boarding to see what progress had been made in the reconstruction of the tower.

If any progress has really been made it wasn't visible to the naked eye, although it is generally believed that ample funds have been destined for the work. After making this brief inspection Vox Urbis entered St. Mark's. That, at least, was safe, to all appearance, although it is nearly a thousand years since the Duge Peter Orseolo I, laid the first stone of it. Every century since the tenth has added some new beauty to it. You are perhaps disappointed that it does not look larger, but you find it more full of beauty and variety than Cologne, Strasbourg, Seville or St. Peter's.

Your first impression when you enter is that you are in a golden cavern with walls encrusted with precious stones. St. Mark's has fascinated visitors who have been unmoved by any other building in Europe, for its history, its completeness, its endless variety, its harmony, its wealth of marbles and mosaics, its marvelous blending of architectural style—Byzantine, Roman, Greek, Arabic, Gothic. It is not hard, then, to imagine the consternation which filled all Italy last week when the newspapers announced that St. Mark's was every moment in imminent danger of collapsing. An effort has since been made to minimize the gravity of the situation—architects, artists, builders, the most skilled in the country, have been set to work to devise means for the preservation of this priceless relic of antiquity. Whether they will succeed or not only the future can tell.

If good wishes could have made his Christmas a happy one Pius X., should have been the happiest of mortals this year. On December 24 and 25 thousands of telegrams reached him from all parts of the earth. On Christmas eve the cardinals of the Curia visited him in a body, as they have done for his predecessors for many hundreds of years. The only one among them raised by the purple by himself was Cardinal Merry del Val. He has been Cardinal only one year, but that year has aged him at least a decade. Of the other Princes of the Church who gathered round Pius X., all were "creations" of Leo XIII., except Cardinal O'Leary, now the only Cardinal surviving from the days of Pius IX. He acted as a spokesman for his colleagues. It was a brief and touching ceremony, and the Holy Father, in thanking the Sacred College for their good wishes, referred to the great need he has of their sympathy and support during these days of trial for the Church.

Yesterday still another Baptism took place in St. Peter's—that of the Venerable Stephen Bellesini. Like the Blessed Giuseppe del Bufalo, who was beatified last Sunday week, the Blessed Bellesini is a modern saint. Some of the old people at Genzano, famous for its shrine of Our Lady of Good Counsel, can still remember him, for it is only sixty-four years ago since he died, and even children of that time are likely to carry to the graves with them the horrors of the typhus epidemic which raged among them. Father Bellesini was the parish priest of Genzano and a member of the Augustinian Order. After spending himself for months among his stricken people he too caught the dread disease and died on Feb. 2, 1840, at the exact moment predicted by him. Next Sunday Pius X., will beatify two Capuchin martyrs, and on the Sunday following the Venerable John Viannet, better known as the Cure of Ars.

Until a year ago it was hoped that among the new Bishops included the Philadelphia Bishop Neumann, who would thus be the first American citizen to be raised to the altars of the Church; but that process has been unexpectedly delayed, and it may be some years yet before the O'gregation of Rites completes it.

VOX URBIS.

A tornado has caused serious damage in the city and harbor of Rio Janeiro, Brazil, according to a press dispatch from that city. A wall of the college of San Vicente de Paul collapsed. One Sister of Charity and one pupil were killed and ten pupils were injured.

Items of Interest.

The clergy of the Diocese of Dijon, in France, have formed an association to protect their honor from the attacks made upon it by the enemies of religion.

The Capuchin Order in Ireland has suffered a great loss by the death in Dublin of Very Rev. Father Bernard (Jennings). Father Bernard, who was but 54 years of age, was born at Donoughmore, County Cork, and served a term as provincial of the Irish province of his order.

Rev. John Charleson, formerly the occupant of a Presbyterian charge at Thornliebank, Scotland, was raised to the dignity of the priesthood in the Basilica of St. John Lateran, Rome, on December 17. Father Charleson will labor in the Glasgow Diocese.

By way of preparation for his great move for the separation of Church and State, Combes succeeded the other day in having passed through the French Chamber a bill which is to abolish the monopoly of conducting burials hitherto possessed by the various religious bodies. In other words, Christian burial is to be practically put a stop to.

Mother St. Mathilda, of the Dames de St. Maur, has celebrated at Yokohama, Japan, the seventieth anniversary of her entrance into religion. Twenty-one years of her religious life were spent in Singapore, and for thirty years past she has been working vigorously in Japan. At the age of ninety-one she still directs her community.

Amongst recent gifts to the Holy Father was a golden collar which a poor old lady of Florence had sent to be placed on the arms of Our Lady of Lourdes in the Vatican Gardens, the old woman having saved up penny after penny till she had gathered the sum of 80 francs. The Sovereign Pontiff was so pleased with her thought that he sent a special blessing to her, as well as a medal, which he blessed for her.

From Grahamstown, Cape Colony, comes an account of the death and funeral of Mother Gertrude, of the Most Holy Sacrament, for thirty-five years a strenuous laborer among the ignorant, the poor and the afflicted of South Africa. A notable circumstance in connection with her passing is that the secular papers of Cape Colony have uniformly referred to her, not as Mother Gertrude, but as "Noire Mere" (Our Mother), the name by which for the past half-century she has been known and loved throughout the southern half of the Dark Continent.

It may be worth noting that Mother Gertrude's brother, General de Henningsen, fought on the Confederate side in the American Civil War.

The Dublin "Freeman" has this interesting and edifying story about a distinguished convert to Catholicism and the Rosary in Irish, a correspondent writes: "Some years ago I spent a holiday in a pretty rural district near London. One of the inhabitants of the valley was the Hon. William Gibson eldest son of Lord Ashbourne, who had a short time before become a convert to Catholicism. Attached to Mr. Gibson's house was a private chapel, to which all neighbors of the household of faith were admitted. In this chapel Mr. Gibson on Saturday evenings himself said the Rosary in Irish. The responses were also said in Irish by some gentleman who came from London every week's end, and who appeared to be an enthusiastically Gaelic as well as his host."

Lord Ashbourne is Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and not a Catholic, though Catholics are now eligible to that office, thanks to legislation of the Gladstone policy and period.

The funeral of the late Pio Cento, the faithful servant for so many years of His Holiness Leo XIII., of holy memory, took place in the parish of St. Mary Magdalen, Rome. The hier, according to the old Roman custom, was carried on a dais by representatives of the Papal family and court were present, and several officers of the Swiss Guard. The greatest sympathy is felt on all sides for the bereaved family, for during his long years of faithful service at the Vatican Signor Pio Cento made himself both loved and respected. Even the Liberal organ, the "Tribuna," which cannot be accused of partiality to Vatican officials, pays a magnificent tribute to his memory, and to the integrity and uprightness with which he discharged his many and varied duties. Had he so wished, he could have been a very rich man, but because he was so faithful he has left his family in comparatively impoverished circumstances. He was known to have often refused and returned gifts of money, etc., sent him by those who were grateful for his many acts of courteous kindness.

"Happy the man who accuses himself to make every day a day of accounting," says the Latin. "If we would leave behind us every night our fair record ready to make the next day better, we shall at the end of the year find some comfort in the retrospect, some confidence in the future. The wise man is not the man that never fails; he is the man that always struggles to his feet after his fall, and makes new his resolution again. We must not be discouraged if we find that we are human."

With peculiar appropriateness to the season, says Dominican, "the Church ushers in the new year by consecrating its first month to the Holy Name of Jesus—that Name which is above all names. That in the Name of Jesus every knee should bow, of those that are in Heaven, on earth and under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that the Lord Jesus Christ is in the glory of the Father." Myriads of celestial spirits ceaselessly praise this Sacred Name in strains of exquisite music—the echoes of those heavenly harmonies awaken hope and love in those who still await their summons to the company of the Blessed."

Germany, says the London "Catholic Times," has once again been the home of a movement which must materially increase the power of the Church in that land. A meeting just held at Frankfurt has inaugurated a Catholic Women's Association. Some such project has long been in the mind of German social reformers. In November, 1903, about a hundred ladies met and discussed the feasibility of starting a women's association. On January 1, 1904, the work was on foot, and the organization started at Strassburg, Wurzburg and Wiesbaden. Then Cologne, Munster and Augsburg took up the good cause, so that in November of last year some fourteen hundred women workers had joined the association. Since then the crusade has increased, and everywhere women are inscribing their names on the rolls of associates. The programme is extensive. The association aims at benefiting the two million women workers in Germany, whose conditions of toil may need amelioration. It will consider the education of young girls, the safeguarding of women released from jail, the protection of young women at stations and ports, and inquire into the position of women workers in factories and shops. The association will prove a valuable adjunct to the numerous and excellent societies already existing, and while we wish it every success in its good work, we envy German Catholics their power and facility of acting for the defense of their needy and helpless co-religionists.

The German Emperor was present the other day at a Requiem Mass in St. Hedwig's Church, Berlin, for Prince Anton Radziwill, whose remains have been laid in the family vault at Niesewitz, in the Russian Government district of Minsk. The death of Prince Anton Radziwill, who was seventy-two years of age, has removed a son of an ancient family who has exercised a very powerful influence in Berlin society and was on intimate personal relations with the Emperor. He was a man of wonderful tact. His close friendship with the present Kaiser's grandfather was maintained during the Kulturkampf, though he showed his sympathy with the opposition to that policy and voted with the Poles in the Upper House of the Prussian Diet. One of his cousins has for many years led the Polish party in the Reichstag. Another cousin, Prince Elmsdorf, was a Benedictine and a domestic chaplain to the Pope. By Irish Catholics Prince Elmsdorf will be remembered through having made a strong protest at the O'Connell centenary celebration in Dublin against any State interference in ecclesiastical affairs. No one has felt more sincere sorrow on the death of Prince Anton than the Emperor. In making an official announcement of the sad event His Majesty says that the deceased was a pattern of usefulness devoted to the house of his king, and that earthly fidelity could not be better exemplified than it was in his conduct. The Radziwils have been as loyal to Church as to State, and have usually contributed their share to the success of the German Catholic congresses.
