He Couldn't Be Wrong.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

We heard a man say an unusually mean thing about his wife the other day. "How could he say that?" we wondered after he had gone.

"How could he help it?" said the Authorman.

"Help it?" we echoed indignantly. "Why, it was a horrid thing to say. Why shouldn't he help it?"

"He couldn't," persisted the Authorman, "that is, not if he stuck to the main article of his creed."

"What is that?"

"Puts Him In A Hard Place."

"That he can never be wrong. He was in a hard place; he had been practically proved wrong, the only way he could justify himself was to put the blame on his wife. It was a yellow thing to do, but he had to do it. Poor man, I'm rather sorry for him on the whole."

"Sorry for him?" sniffed the Authorman's wife. "I shouldn't think you'd be, after the way he spoke. I think it rather reflects on you."

The Authorman shrugged his shoulders helplessly. Is there any more utter helplessness than that one feels with a person who is constitutionally incapable of getting one's point of view.

Personally I like the Authorman's analysis of the case, don't you?

After all, could anyone be in a more difficult position than the man who cannot be wrong?

The Simplest Way Out of a Mistake.

The very best of us make mistakes now and then. Other people discover these mistakes and bring them home to us. To admit that one has been wrong is the simplest way out. No one can continue to blame you for a fault when you frankly acknowledge it and avow your intention of overcoming it.

But the man who cannot be wrong cannot thus abandon an untenable position. He must continue to hold it no matter what the odds against him. And to do this he is often forced to abandon fair means and take to foul.

He has to say mean things and show a yellow streak. He has to lie and avail himself of the weapon of unmerited sarcasm and unjustified ridicule.

It Must Be Terrible To Have To Use Such Weapons.

Why shouldn't anyone who couldn't bear to touch such weapons with his finger tips pity the man whose character forces him to employ them?

Besides, there is another penalty for never being wrong.

If you are never willing to blame yourself for anything, you must consider yourself blameless. If you consider yourself blameless, that means that you feel you are perfect.

If you think you are perfect, you see no need for growth and development and you will permit yourself to stand still.

And as the most real happiness and satisfaction of life is in growth, in climbing up and on "to new Kingdoms of Heaven," why shouldn't we pity the man to whom this part of life is closed.

Why, indeed?

The Sinking of the "Ancona."

Naples, Nov. 12, via Paris, Nov. 13.—Survivors of the Ancona, interrogated by the authorities of Tunis, testified, according to telegrams received here to-day from Tunis, that a submarine during the night chased the boats containing the passengers and captured some of them.

Paris, Nov. 13.—Passengers aboard the Italian liner Ancona were compelled to seek safety in the boats while the steamer was subjected to a cannonade from an Austrian submarine, according to a graphic story of the sea tragedy told by Dr. Cecile L. Greil, of New York, to the Havas correspondent at Ferryville.

The American woman escaped only through her ability as a gymnast. She tried vainly to find a place in two boats, but there was no room for her. She saved herself by dropping from the deck into a launch which already was in the sea. Her maid was killed in their cabin by a gunshot.

Dr. Greil's story indicates that the torpedo which sent the Ancona to the bottom was not fired until the steamer had been riddled by shots from the guns of the submarine.

"I was in the dining-room of the first-class passengers," Dr. Greil said, "chatting with some of the voyagers when we heard the report of a cannon. There was great excitement on deck and men were running here and there. I asked the ship's doctor what was happening, and he replied that he did not know. Then I went on deck myself.

Shell Killed Maid.

"I saw through a slight fog a submarine about a hundred yards distant. It was equipped with two cannon, forward and aft, which were being fired rapidly. I went down to my cabin to get my papers and there found my maid who pleaded with me to save her.

"A cannon shot interrupted our conversation. A shell entered the vessel through the port-hole and killed ed my maid. I took my valise and small handbag containing valuables, after putting on my hat and coat, and went up to the deck with a lifebelt.

"Boats were being lowered, all completely filled. I sought to get into one of them and was told there was no room. I went to another and received the same response. I then crossed the deck and saw a launch afloat. This contained the chief engineer, Carlo Lomberti, two doctors, and other first class passengers, some of the women and members of the crew.

"I asked Lomberti to be allowed to get in.

"Come on," he said, at the same time grasping the side of the steamer to prevent the small boat from moving off.

"I gauged well the height which separated me from the boat, and being well trained in gymnastics, I did not hesitate to let myself fall into the launch, landing at the place designated.

"During all this time the submarine had not ceased bombarding the Ancona, not paying the slightest attention to the women, children and men trying to get away. At this moment the submarine was very close to us. The fog lifted and we could clearly distinguish the Austrian flag, which was new.

The Ancona resisted the cannonade well. Many of the shots entered above the waterline, and the holes caused by others were too small to admit much water, as the sea was very calm. To finish the work the submarine discharged a torpedo, and the vessel began to sink.

"Some hours afterwards we encountered a heavily-laden boat, which was leaking. We took aboard five women and four children in order to lighten it. Lomberti then took it in tow, not permitting more passengers to crowd into our boat.

"Lomberti did his best to reassure the unfortunates under his charge, most of whom were in tears, telling them all would be well if they heeded his advice.

"His energetic attitude prevented a panic and finally brought about order. I did all I could to encourage the women and children, who continued their cries of grief.

"When the sun disappeared we saw a black spot in the horizon, and all the survivors began gradually excited. It wasn't another submarine, however, but the steamer Pluton, which had seen our signals and rescued us about 7 o'clock in the evening. Later it headed for Bizerta, after having circled the vicinity of the spot where the Ancona was torpedoed and rescued other survivors who were in boats."
