opposed to him was "Lefty" Rogers, the scrappy—only conversationally—left fielder and general utility man of the Senators. Rogers is the best south-paw in the league next to Heck, and as he has only pitched a few games this season, and was in great shape for the contest, he had a powerful advantage over Heck, who has been shouldering the biggest part of the pitching burden of the London team. LINNEBORN CALLED AWAY OWING TO WIFE'S ILLNESS

The London team will be without the services of Eddie Linneborn when it plays Ottawa in the second game of the series today. Before the game was over yesterday, a telegram came for Linneborn informing him that his wife in Buffalo was seriously ill. As a result, Linny left last evening for his home city, and will remain there until his wife is out of danger.

Coming at this time, the loss of Linneborn will be doubly felt by the London team. Eddie has been playing a great game for London this season, and he is the most valuable man on the lub as a run-getter. It is to be hoped that Mrs. Linneborn's illness is not so serious as the telegree implies, and that she speedily recovers.

Touching Second Is a Hobby With This Outfielder

Casey Stengel, the Brooklyn centre fielder, is superstitious, like many other ballplayers. He believes that his success as batsman and fielder depends largely upon the fact that he never fails to step on second base on the way to his position or coming back to the bench Stengel has been touching sec ond nearly all season. An observant fan handed around the tip yesterday, with the result that Stengel was seen in the act of putting both feet on the middle bag at the end of each halfinning.

Stengel says that the day he sprained his leg he had failed to touch the base.
