FOURTEENTH YEAR

A NOTED CROOK.

Shearin Well Known in Toronto and Elsewhere.

SHOT BURGLAR CROZIER HERE

While Assisting to Rob Contractor Godson's House.

The Long Career of Crime of the Man Who Met His Death at Port Dalhousie—Had Served Terms in Both the Penitentiary and Central Prison—Had Only Been Released Some Weeks Ago.

Serving a Seven Years Term When His Life Was Brought to a Close.

Patrick Shearin, the burglar who was shot dead at Port Dalhousie last Sunday morning while attempting to rob the canal toll office, deserved his fate.

Yesterday's developments show that he was one of the most dangerous crooks in Canada, having previously shot one man in this city and served several terms in the Kingston Penitentiary and the Central Prison for burglaries.

The body of Shearin was brought to Toronto yesterday on the steamer Lakeside in charge of his mother, Mrs. Shearin of Ottawa, and his sister, Mrs. Ellis alias Murphy of No. 10 Camden-street, this city. The latter, by the way, has herself appeared in the Police Court on several occasions for minor offences.

Detective Young of the Ontario police came over with the women and Sergeant Reburn met the Lakeside and spotted the woman to Headquarters, where they were put through a series of interrogations with a view of ascertaining as to who Shearin's companions were in the Port Dalhousie burglary, but without result. They were then permitted to depart with the body for Ottawa, where it arrived last evening.

There was an immense crowd of people at the station to meet the party. The World-announcement of yesterday morning that the burglar had been shot, was repeated by Pat Shearin of Cedarvale having caused a great commotion in the town, and it was the sole topic of conversation.

History of the Dead Man. Shearin's parents are respectable, the father being an inductions and steady mechanic, one of the oldest hands at the Cedarvale works.

From his early boyhood Pat did not give promise for a career of crime. He worked for a time at the Cedarvale Works, but when about 18 or 20 years of age he got into a squabble with one of the men for stealing a bit of tools belonging to St. Macfarlane, an employee at the works, and was sent to the penitentiary for a few months.

EXIT, THE CANAL SCHEME.

The Will-to-the-Wind Committee Its Quietness.

It took the Executive Committee just two hours to knock out E. A. Macdonald's canal scheme yesterday. It was a wild meeting, and the fighting on both sides was vigorous. Aid. Lamb, Hallam, Crawford and Lynd made a grand fight against the scheme. They were strongly opposed by the other side.

Before the committee got down to business Mr. Tyrrell, who was one of the arraying party who went over the proposed route of the canal in Mr. Capetown's time, informed the committee that the scheme was and is quite practicable. Mr. Joseph Poole also spoke in favor of the scheme.

Mr. A. M. Smith, a vessel owner of 50 years' experience, said if this proposed canal was built, it would be a great benefit to the city. He said that he had written to the men who are named as provisional directors of the company asking them to be careful when they were here. He would not understand their attitude, when they were asking such extraordinary privileges.

Ald. Shaw asked where the men were that composed the provisional board of directors, as it was understood they were to be present. They should be there to-day, he said, but none of them were here. Mr. Macdonald's statement that he represented them by proxy was received with a gasp.

Ald. Hallam as a business man objected to having his time wasted until it is known who is the proxy. He said that he had written to the men who are named as provisional directors of the company asking them to be careful when they were here. He would not understand their attitude, when they were asking such extraordinary privileges.

Ald. Crawford said as the promoter of the scheme, he was not going to be satisfied until he had seen the provisional directors. He said that he had written to the men who are named as provisional directors of the company asking them to be careful when they were here. He would not understand their attitude, when they were asking such extraordinary privileges.
