HR SCHI-WEEKLY HERALD, AVA WESTERN ADVINITIONS MAY 28.

It has a wider range of soils than the tur nip; it requires less culture and manure, and can be produced under circumstances in which the turnips cannot be profitably

Generally speaking the most profitable application of rape in Ireland is soiling or feeding off with sheep. It is also cultivations in the state of ed for the sake of the seed, and although in this manner considerable sums are realised, yet it is questionable whether on the aggregrate of seasons (except in the more favourable districts of the north east coast) this application of the crop can be consider ed at all times beneficial to the farmer. Rape possesses that convenient pliability of character and hardness of constitution, that sow or plant it when or where you will, it is sure to make a vigorous struggle to exist; and although the climate may in some cases render it expedient to cultivate it exclusively for its seeds, as a green crop for winter or spring feeding it is invaluable, yielding as it does an abundant supply of the most nutritious food at a season when turnips and mangel are equally exhausted and before the winter vetch, clover, or Italian rye-grass are fit for use. One great advantage which the culture of rape presents is, the facility with whiel it may be produced on inferior soils. Rape may often obviate the necessity of an en-tire summer fallow upon such soils, for it may be eaten on the ground by sheep in onth of September, and thus a crop of wheat be sown the same year.

As a stolen crop, (or a crop taken in the interval between harvest and spring), rape becomes particularly valuable to the farmer. It will often yield a good cutting in October, when the frosts have stripped the clover of its leaves, and before the turnips are fit for use, and come in afterwards spring when the turnips-are exhausted, and before the winter vetch is sufficiently

As an intermediate crop it may be culti-uated in various ways. Should the crop it is to succeed be likely to remain too long on the ground, a seed-bed should be sown in June, and the plants transplanted out, as soon as possible after the previous crop. If after vetches, the rape plants should be put in ridge after ridge, as the vetches are cut, giving the ground a dressing of manure. In a great majority of cases the vetches will be off the ground in sufficient time to sow the seed, transplanting in such cases may be dispensed with. It, however, the vetches had been fed off with sheep, the ground will be sufficiently rich for the vious provision be made for a supply of plant from a seed-bed, by stocking the corn on one side of the field as it is cut, and manuring and sowing the cleared part of the stubbles, an excellent crop will be obtained. In Flanders, where rape culture is practised upon the most extensive and omical scale, the stubble is ploughed twice, and the rape dippled in by the plough, laying up the mould upon them, the plants having been previously laid at proper distances. This mode is found more expeditious than dippling." In the north of Ireland it is usual to take a crop of rape after flax. In this case the flax is off the ground sufficiently early to sow the seed, without having recourse to transplanting. The flax stubble having transplanting. The flax stubble having been ploughed and harrowed. The manur is laid on the surface, and a slight covering of mould thrown over it from the furrows the seed is then sown at the rate of 16lbs to the English acre, (25lbs. to the Irish care,) and covered from the furrows. In give five or six weeks feeding of a warm and nutritious kind, at the scarcest season of the year, and the ground cleared off for a spring crop. Mr. Blacker advises, with a view to saving the turnips, that the rape land he sown with the vector, which will land be sown with late vetches, which will

Rape may be sown with advantage on a well prepared fallow, as by overshadowing the land it will fertilise it much; and if on sandy or gravelly soils, and fed off by sheep, it will fit it for a crop of barley. "It may also be sown without manure on a stubble, on which a good crop of brush turnips could not be expected; for although it will not afford much keep during the winter, yet the manure deposited by flock of sheep, and the benefit derived fr the roots when ploughed in, will ultimately promote the fertility of the soil. When rape is sown in this way, it would not be icious to let it stand for seed, as the land not being manured, and the seed late sown, the crop would not produce well, and would leave the land very foul.'*

Quantity of produce.—It is difficult to estimate green food by weight, so much depends upon the state of the weather or hours of the day at which it is cut. Mr. S20tt, of Lurgaboy, near Market-hil', states, in a letter to Mr. Blacker, that he obtained in a cutting in January, 31 stone, 5 pounds, from an English perch; and that he would have a second cutting in March, and a third one in May. And we are informed by Mr. Dangstone in May. by Mr. Dougan, of the same neighborhood, that, with the assistance of a little hay, he was able, on an English acre of rape, to

Rape sown exclusively for its seed must be at greater intervals than when intended for soiling or feeding off by sheep. On the poorer soils they may be left at ten inches apart, or narrower; but on rich soils they may stand at twelve, or fifteen inches with advantage to the seed. In close crops the seed is only found on the summit of the plants, but in wide ones on rich soils, it also

When the crop is grown for soiling or feeding off, no thinning is necessary, In this case it may stand at close intervals, either when transplanted or sown; It does not appear that by eating or pulling off the eaves in winter the produce is at all dimin

Saving the Seed.—About the period Saving the Seed.—About the period of ripening, the crop ought to be attended to, for it will change so quickly if the weather be hot, that a few days would make a great maturity, and probably will reapping to the control of the con maturity, and probably will require to be cut in patches throughout the field. It is also Clinton Cabinet Warehouse. advisable to have it watched from birds a soon as the pods begin to fill. Let the crop on no accouet get too ripe, and if lodged, should be cut even under-ripe, in preference to letting it lay upon the ground. It must be reaped with great care, and then put erect in stocks to ripen in the field. About this time sufficient hands should be engaged for the day it is likely to be fif for the day. for the day it is likely to be fit for thresh the process of which is very simple, but re-quires greot expedition, as the crop must be carried to the sheet, threshed, cleaned, and put into sacks without delay, in order to guard against any risk from showers. It weatever conveyance the crop is carried it musst be kept upright and shook as little as possible until thrown on the sheet; it is as possible until thrown on the sneet; it is then to be well beat out with long poles, and shook carefully. Should the seed be at all damp when brought to the granary, no time should be lost in spreading it thinly on the floor, to remain till perfectly dry and fit barrels, of sixteen stones to the barrel, per Irish acre. The uses of the rape for soiling and feeding off have been already noticed. It is particularly valuable in process of reclaiming bog or other waste grounds, which have been pared and burney or therwise prepared. By sowing such with rape, and feeding off with sheep, a proper mixture of useful grasses may be introduced, and the ground kept in a state of fertility. CLINTON.

The produce in seed is from ten to sixteen

GREAT REDUCTION IN THE PRICE

The Westminster Review (Liberal) Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine (Tory.) The great and important events-Religious

The great and important events—Religious, Political, and Military—now agitating the nations of the Old World, give to these Publications an interest and value they never before possessed. They occupy a middle ground between the hastily written news-items, crude speculations, and flying rumors of the newspaper, and the ponderous Tome of the historian, written long after the living interest in the facts he records shall have passed away. The progress of the War in the East occupies a large space in their pages. Fvery movement is closely criticized, whether of friend or of foe, and all short-comings fearlessly pointed out. The letters from the Craina and form the Baltic in Blackwood's Magazine, from two of its mos popular contributors, give a more intelligible and reliable account of the movements of the great belligerents than can elsewhere be found.

These periodicals ably represent the three great political parties of Great Britain—Whig, Tory, and Radical,—but politics forms only one feature of their character. As Organs of the most profound writers on Science, Literature, Morality and Religion, they stand, as they ever have stood, unrivalled in the world of letters, being considered indispensable to the scholar and the professional man, while to the intelligent reader of every class they furnish a more correct and satisfactory record of the current literature of the day, throughout the world, than can be possibly obtained from any other source
