THE STORY OF TAMAKI S.IN.

(HE little girl about whom I want to tell jou this story is named Camnki San. She is sitting over thers on the side of the room which opens out into tho ga den, hasy over hee lessons fur seliool, for she is very studious, and examinatious aro coming on. We call her our littlo curly haired ginl, aud thinl: the short black hair curling around her fuce very pretty, but it is a great trial to hor', and she longs to be 'grown up,' so she can do up tho troublesome curls out of sight, for Japanoso people do not like curly hair and do all they can to keop it straight. Tamaki San is now about nino years old; she has been about a year in the -Orphanage, and has bsen from the first one of the must obedient and diligent, so that after a few months she was allowed to go to school, where she now stands at the had of her class, nud has takon the first two year's work in one, though sho did not know even a letter when she came to ns. It is not of her ability, however, that I want to write now, but of the way in which she remembers what she has learned about the true God.

Tamaki San's father died leaving the mother very poor, and she could not earn onough to get food for her little boy and girl, so she sent them to our Daijime Poor sehool to make match boxes, where they earned a sen or two a day, and through the Poor School teacher the mother learned of our Orphanage, and asked us to take her little girl in. After the necessary agreement was made we took her, and then the mother wont to her father's about sovon miles out in the country where she and the little bay could earu their living by working in the rice fields. This Spring the grandfather became very ill, and they thought him dying. He wanted to see all bis grand-children again, and begged to have lamaki San sent for, so I allowed her to go out one Saturday with the Daijime teacher, and the grandfather was very much pleased to see her. The teacher came to tell us about it when he had brought Tamaki San safely back that afternoon. When they reached the house they found the graudfather better, but the relatives were all thare, and he said he felt very proud of his littlo charge because she was so much more gentle and quiet than the othor grand-children, and answered all her grandfather's questions so nicoly. At nown they all took their dinner together, but when the others began to eat Trmaki San closed her eyes and asked a blessing on her food before she began. The grandfather noticed her and asked her why she did that. She answered that sho was just saying "thank you" to God for giving her the dinner she was about to eat. The grandfalher was quite touched, and said, with lears in his eyes, "Woll, if that is what Christianity teaches, it must be a good roligion I am sure." He also spoke of the improvemont in Tamaki San's manners and speech, and said ho wished the other grandchildren could go to a Chistian school, if they could be taught as sho had been. Wo wore so glad to hear of the good impression in favor of christianity that was thus made by one littlo girl not boing ashamed to acknowledge her Heavonly Father's care of her, We have sent ono of the gospels and some Christian papers to tho grandfather since, that he may havo an opportunity to lema more of 'Tanaki Sam's Ged, and we are praying that through these means some knowlodge of Christ may come to the little country village which as yot knows only gods of wood and stone. May it not be that "a little child shall lend them?"
