Does Marmorek's anti-tubercular scrum possess bactericidal powers? This at the present time is a question very difficult to answer, yet I feel positive, as a result of clinical tests, that it is truly an anti-toxine, and that it does possess the power of inhibiting the growth of the tubercle baccilus, but as with all anti-toxines, this power is ephemeral.

CASE NO. L.

A single woman aged thirty-seven. Family history negative. Illness began in the summer of 1899. She was then treated in a sanatorium, and returned to her former occupation the following summer, and kept fairly well until the early fall of 1903, when she relapsed, went to the
