

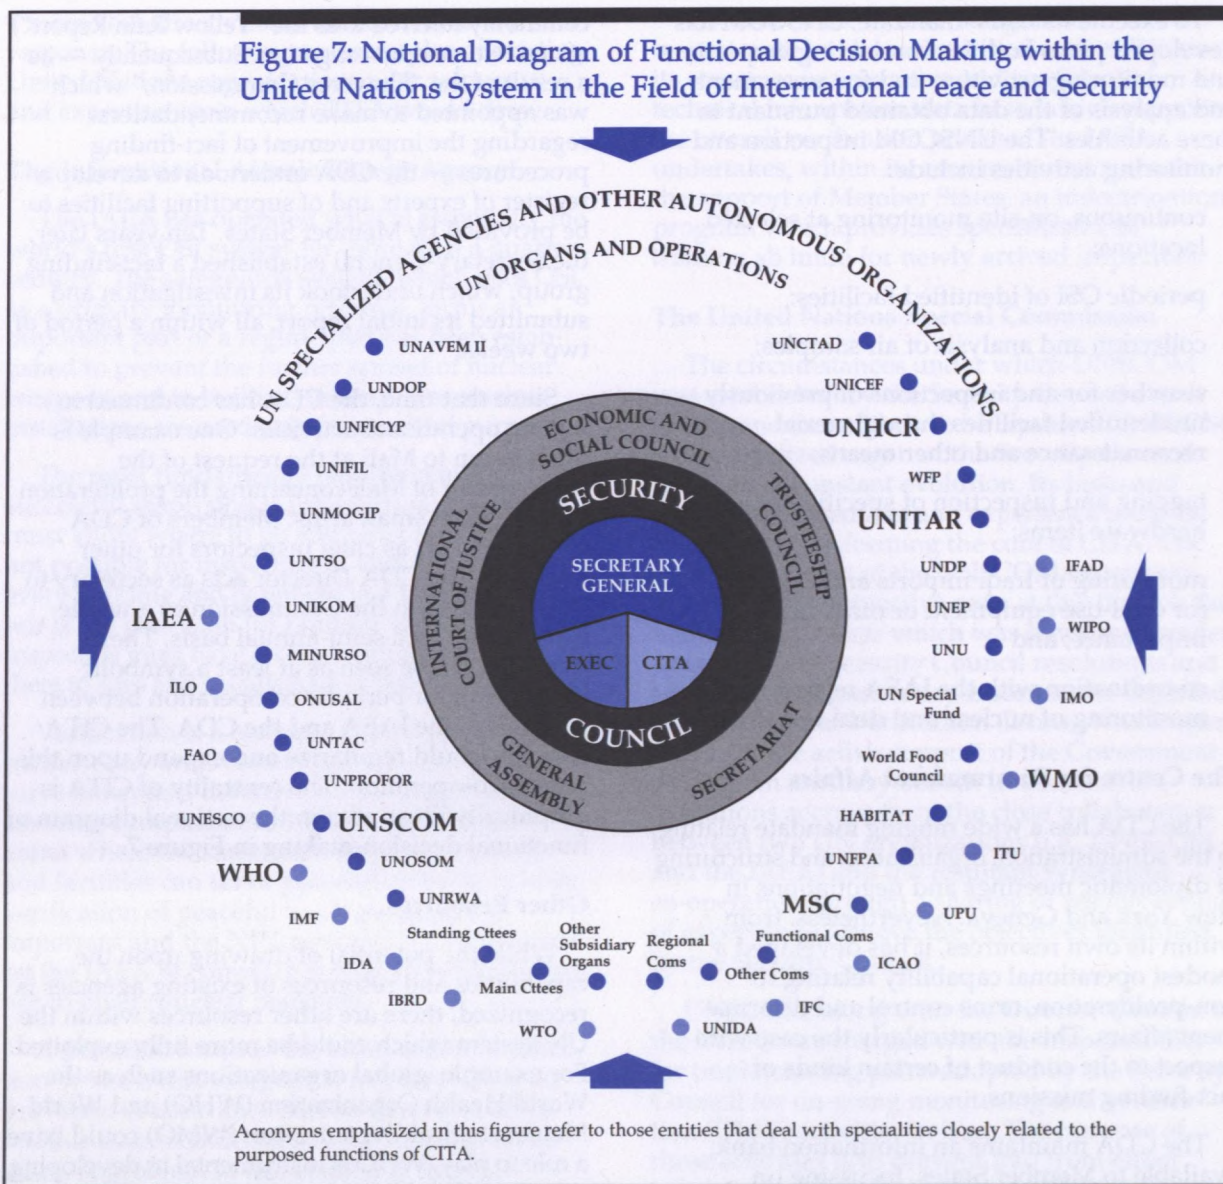

Figure 7: Notional Diagram of Functional Decision Making within the United Nations System in the Field of International Peace and Security

32

this expertise has direct application to the international security and arms control agenda.

In addition to drawing from and co-ordinating expertise from these UN agencies, CITA could exploit expertise and resources in other areas as well. These could include:

- Non-UN treaty organizations: The OPCW under the CWC, for example, is developing a capability, patterned after the IAEA in terms of OSI, which will expand upon the right of access. A right of unimpeded access for inspectors to relevant sites and material is of crucial importance when there is information suggesting the need for such inspections.

- Member States: Most Member States have national means of obtaining information in

