

of Copp's Hill, was the second established in the city, and is still sacredly preserved. Here lies three fathers of the Puritan Church, Drs. Increase, Cotton and Samuel Mather.

THE OLD CEMETERY IN THE COMMON.

In that corner of the Common bounded by Tremont and Boylston streets, and lying directly between the Masonic Temple and the Public Library, is an old burying-ground, shut off from the Common and the streets by an iron fence. It was formerly known as the South, and later as the Central burying-ground. It was opened in 1756, but the oldest stone is dated 1761. The best known name upon any of the ancient stones is that of Monsieur Julien, the most noted restaurateur of the city a century past, and the inventor of the famous soup that still bears his name. This cemetery is the least interesting of the old burying places of Boston, and is consequently seldom noticed by the stranger.

There are according to the directory nearly two hundred hotels in the city. With that fact in view I shall mention first the Hotel Brunswick which ranks as high as any hotel on the continent, kept on the American plan. For European, Young's Hotel as recently fitted up is the best of its kind: for "Old Landmarks" the American and United States. In suggesting to intending visitors to Boston the name of the "Old United States Hotel" the proprietor feels justified in recommending the house for just what it is, no more, no less. I am at home when in the United States Hotel, Boston; it pleases me, and I am positive it will please you. The hotel was built over half a century ago,
