tion Judge Morgan is called upon by the township to decide. The bridge in question has long been a bone of contention between the county and the township, the latter contending that as the distance from bank to bank was 400 feet, it should be included in the list of county bridges which need only be 300 feet in length before they come under the jurisdiction of the county. The bridge has hitherto been maintained by the township. Part of it was washed away by a spate in the spring of this year, and this circumstance has brought the dispute to a head.

head.

The judge's chambers were crowded yesterday with farmers and merchants from the district. Walter Thompson, a member of the township council, stated that he had used the bridge for forty years. It was the most traveled road in that part of the country, being the main road between Newmarket and Pefferain, and it also carried the traffic from Beaverton.
