

Woman's World...

Devoted Specially to the Interests of our Women Readers.

Conducted by Katherine Leslie.

The more one sees of life's ups and downs, and the more one studies the capricious freaks of fortune, the more is one convinced of the wisdom of those who advocate the training of all girls, rich or poor, in some one profession or trade, which they can always turn in case of necessity. It does not matter whether the girl intends to marry or not—marriage is no security against the future, unless a woman is happily provided with settlements of her own. A girl may marry well, and everything go prosperously for years, but her husband may have business reverses, or sickness and ill-health may come to cut off his income, and it will then devolve upon the wife to do what she can. She will have to put her hand to the wheel and steer her household through all sorts of financial difficulties. Said a pale little woman to me the other day, as we talked over the reverses which had come to her through the continued invalidism of her husband: "It is my turn now. As long as I wanted for nothing, and I never knew a care or an anxiety financially. Now that he is laid aside, I must do my share, and so long as the children are strong and well, and he is free from worry, I shall not mind. I can only thank my mother, who foresaw all such things, and made me study a profession which I can follow in my own home, and so keep it together." She was a slight, delicate little thing, but the spirit that looked out of her eyes showed of a strong, good stuff her character was made.

It is one of the finest qualities women have, this ready assuming of the burden of providing an income for their households when husbands have been incapacitated, through ill-health, or taken away untimely. And it is one of the most ordinary things—hardly one of us but knows half a dozen of such brave, plucky little women, who have taken up quite cheerfully the burden of life when the husband, by right, has been resting, or left to bring up their children in comfort. Fortune has few favorites, and a financial or health crisis may occur in any household at any time. It is for such emergencies that all women should be prepared. The future is generally a thing of dread to women, married or unmarried, who are unprovided for, but, with some profession or trade at their finger-ends, they need fear no future, either for themselves or their children. If it be needlework, writing, or painting, or any such profession as can be pursued at home, so much the better for the woman, but, in any case, let her excel in at least one thing, no matter what it be, and the future will cease to have any terror for her.

You girls, who are always dissatisfied with your appearance, and who are always grumbling that your dressmaker or tailor has no style, just turn your attention to your figures, and you will see. How do you stand, upright and lightly poised, or heavily, lurching forward, either from the waist or from the shoulders? Do you not know that an upright carriage is the first essential of style, and that a proper position of the head and shoulders will do more for your appearance than many dressmakers? How can the smartest tailor make a costume look well if the back is round, the chest flat, and the head precedes the body by several inches? If you consider the matter you will find that the fault is entirely your own. You have fallen into a slovenly, ugly way of lounging, both in sitting and standing, and the result is seen in your figure. If the inside of the body suffers as much through lack of proper posture—and there can be no doubt that it does—as the outside, then it is no wonder that so many women are always unhappy. It is nothing but a bad habit, this lax of posture in women's figures; a little thought and attention will soon correct it, and then it will be found that stooping and bending forward are anything but pleasant or easy, after a proper poise of the body has been attained. I have clipped a few very simple directions, which will prove beneficial. They are simple, and please I have seen, and will be quite easy to follow: In the normal, correct posture, the head and neck will be erect, parallel with the vertical line, the front wall of the chest will be well in front of it, and the hips well back of it. In the usual incorrect position the head is forced forward of a vertical line passing through the centre of gravity between the body, the chest is flat, throwing that part of spine between the shoulders backward, the hips are forward, and the abdomen protrudes. To correct this position, unless it is extremely bad, the first attention must be paid to the hips. They must be forced back, the small of the back being hollowed, and the abdomen drawn in a little. Then the head, held perfectly erect, must be moved back, without tilting either forward or backward, the chin coming in against the throat. No attention whatever must be paid to the chest and shoulders. The head and shoulders being back, it will be a necessary and involuntary result that the chest shall go forward to preserve the balance, and the shoulders will roll gently backward and downward, if left to themselves. For a fairly good position, then, all that is necessary is "hips back and chin in," and the entire leaving to themselves of the chest and shoulders.

There is no department of art to which the feminine world is more devoted than to ceramics. Every exhibition of the kind is always well attended by women, who are interested either as lovers of beautiful china or as artists themselves of more or less merit. For the number of Toronto women who merely "dabble" in ceramics is very large, while the number of real workers, either for pleasure or profit, is immense. That feminine interest in decorated china was very great was again shown this week by the large numbers of women who found their way every day up to Mrs. Whiton's annual exhibition of ceramics. Mrs. Whiton's own work is so very well and favorably known that it needs no comment, but some of the pieces were so exquisitely painted and decorated that I cannot forbear mentioning them. Both were done in that lovely soft yellow finish, and were decorated with jewelled garlands—one of blue forget-me-nots, set in a rich garland of gold, while the other had a border of purple violets, each violet having a jewel in its centre. The entire neck studded in turquoise effect, in jewelled gold, the turquoise work being done with perfect evenness; the lower part of the case was beautifully painted with sweet peas, that suggested the exquisite fragrance of these flowers, so well were they done.

Miss Strachan has a very large and varied display of pieces, all of which showing the artist in ceramics. Notable in her collection was a jardiniere, decorated with purple stripes, a flower which in Miss Strachan's clever handling lent itself admirably to decorative purposes; the rim of the jardiniere was of dark brown green, outlined with jewelled work in gold, and the whole was finished in dull glaze. It was a unique and creditable bit of work. Very good, too, was a tall German beer tankard, decorated by this young lady; dark and light purple grapes formed the floral ornamentation on the main body of the tankard. The base was a broad band of highly glazed dark green, above which ran an attractive and original frieze of blue and gold. The big
