seats are of plum colored velvet. The fire set and andirons are of wrought iron.

It is much harder to give the comfortable cozy effect to a room which has the fireplace on the long side instead of at the end. One way to treat such conditions is to build two seats out on an angle so as not to project too far into the room, and yet so that they will form a shelter spot about the fire. These seats are made with high backs and ends so as to keep out the draughts. They are and of the wainscoting that runs around the room. In this room the woodwork is painted white and the walls, bung with brown paper. Natural colory pongee is used for the window curtains. The dark brown cushions harmonize with the colors of the walls. This color is also carried out in the portieres at the doors.

A very good way to treat a dining room fireplace is to use a perfectly plain manning the will be used to supply us the following quotations of the will load potatoes at Plekford & Black's was reported Dr. Fuller was called and went of small pox.
