"Is this the kind, Grandma?"
"Yes, this is Windsor Salt."
"Well, I forgot the name so I asked the grocer for the best table salt he had, and he said Windsor Salt was what everybody used, so I took it."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Is the best of all medicines for the cure of diseases, disorders and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skillful specialist in the diseases of women.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system. THE ONE REMEDY which contains no opium and no injurious habit-forming drugs, which creates no craving for each stimulant.

THE ONE REMEDY which its makers are not afraid to print its every ingredient on each outside bottle wrapper and attest to the truthfulness of the same under oath.

It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine of known composition. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. Such a man is not to be trusted. He is trifling with your most priceless possession—your health—may be your life itself. See that you get what you ask for.

TOLSTOI

Writing in The London (Eng.) News on Tolstoi's last birthday, Russian Baynolds said:

It may be that a future age will venerate the man of letters, the great novelist, the writer of "Peace and War," and of "Anna Karenina," and forget Tolstoi the teacher; but to us he is above all things the apostle of peace, love and simplicity, who has made his voice heard above the din of the modern world.

The extraordinary popularity enjoyed by him in Russia was demonstrated a few months ago, when he passed through Moscow. At the railway station and in the streets enormous crowds gathered and cheered him. I have seen the czar drive through this capital. A few men uncovered as he passed, but nobody cheered and there was no sign of enthusiasm; that which was denied the czar, Tolstoi, the peasant's blessing, was given to the old man in a peasant's blouse.

I have sometimes asked myself what is the reason for the veneration in which Russians hold Tolstoi. The question is a pertinent one, because there are few who attempt to mold their lives on his teaching. The answer to the question, is I think, partly to be found in the fact that the autocracy and orthodoxy, the two pillars of the Russian state, have found their worst enemy in Tolstoi. The Tolstoi who preaches the simple life may be regarded as a dreamer—let us crown ourselves with roses before they are withered!—is a more popular divine in contemporary Russia—but when the old man rose up, as he lately did, and in wrath denounced the wholesale sacrifice of life, by which Stolypin has established the new triumph of autocracy, he was listened to, as were the prophets who rebuked the tyrant and made him the spokesman of his fellow-countrymen. They saw in him a defender and a champion, whom the government could not touch.

His fame has gone out into all lands, and the glory he has brought to his country has been another factor contributing to the affection in which he is held by Russians. It is thanks to foreign opinion, that Tolstoi has been allowed to remain at peace. The government has not dared to stir up the indignation of the whole world by throwing him into prison or by bounding him out of the country. It has confined itself to annoying and harassing him. He has been driven from the pale of the Established Church, and when he comes to die his children will not be allowed to bury his bones in holy ground. His follower, Prince Elkhoff, has been persecuted, and by imperial decree deprived of the children he was bringing up to live the simple life the teacher would have lived himself. A beloved disciple, Tcherkoff, was banished from Yauyaya Polyana in order to hurt the teacher. He has been sent to the quiet when he has heard of the bookellers fined or imprisoned for selling certain of his books. The persecution has been indirect, but nevertheless difficult to bear. Yet, because the world recognized the nobility of his teaching the autocrat has been unable to cast him down, and this is the supreme witness to his greatness and to the splendor of his mission.

REDMOND SENDS THANKS

Irish Leader Expresses Gratitude For Support—Some Things Accomplished

John E. Redmond, M. P., has sent a letter from Dublin expressing his gratitude and that of the Irish party to Ireland's friends in America for the welcome and support accorded them during their recent visit.

In the letter, which is addressed to Michael J. Ryan, national secretary of the United Irish League of America, Philadelphia, he says:

"My dear Mr. Ryan—I am anxious to write you a few lines to thank you and the other national officers of the United Irish League for their unflinching efforts to make my tour the success which it has been. My most sanguine anticipations have been exceeded, and I feel that this has been the most successful tour ever made by members of the national party in this country. What struck me more than it ever did before was the widespread interest taken in the present phase of Irish movement by business and professional men everywhere. I was not merely, I feel, the unflinching efforts of yourself and other friends, but also to the fact that the people have come to appreciate what has been accomplished in Ireland during the last ten years.

"The creation of 300,000 peasant proprietors.

"The erection of 50,000 laborers' cottages in place of the wretched hovels which were a disgrace to Ireland.

"The restoration of 3,000 evicted families to their homes.

"The creation of a great national university.

"These and other things are the fruits of the last ten years of labor on our part, and of consistent support on the part of our friends in America. Much remains, however, yet to be done, and there is greater need than ever for steady and continuous support for the party."

GUARDING CROWN JEWELS

Back in Wakefield Tower After Being Secreted For Months

(From a London Exchange.)

The jewel house will be reopened and the regalia will be on view on and after Monday, the 7th inst., under the usual regulations.

SPENCER, Lord Chamberlain.

It is with this notice, printed in large black letters on a white card, affixed to the gates of the tower of London, that the authorities intimate that the Crown jewels are once again in the Wakefield tower, after an absence of several months, during which time their whereabouts have been kept a profound secret. They will be on view from 10 o'clock this morning for the first time since their return to the tower.

Since the jewel room was last open to the public great changes have been made in its structure and fittings. It has become a strong room, containing many ingenious devices, which are calculated to be sufficient to resist the attacks of the most scientific burglars the world has yet known. A new stone floor has been set, and the great stone walls have been strengthened. A grid made of the finest tempered steel, with bars placed close together, has been placed over the jewels, and the plate-glass regalia showcase. Automatic steel gates, which at the pressure of a button will close over the jewels, have been fitted. The slightest pressure upon any part of the grid will cause great guns to ring in various parts of the tower, while the touch of a button will cause the great iron doors of the jewel room to close automatically.

COCAINE FIEND HAS GRIP IN MONTREAL

Eleven Boys Found by Detective in Alleged Den—Youth With Drug Outfit

(Montreal Gazette.)

It was an unkempt and heavy-eyed crowd of boys that Judge Leet arraigned Saturday morning. Bernard Foley, arrested in his room in Lagachetiere street east, the charge of selling cocaine, was entering these eleven boys in his room at the time of Detective Gorman's visit. All were taken into custody.

Foley pleaded not guilty to the charge of selling cocaine. He said that the stock of the drug found in his room was for his own use. William Durkin and Bernard Smith, who were in the room at the time, said that they had been seized by a chap in St. Lawrence Boulevard to show him where Foley lived, and that they were there merely as guides.

Detective Gorman had a different view of the matter, however. He said that it was his opinion that the young men in question had been inveigled to Foley's for some reason or other, he was not sure what, but he was convinced that they were merely paying Foley a friendly visit. In the case of one of the boys, he was an old chum of his. They had never used cocaine and they certainly had not gone to Foley's to buy any. When arrested, one of the number had a roll of cloth and another a pair of shoes, which, after severe cross-examination on the part of Judge Leet, they admitted having stolen.

Henry Kaufman, Max Lewis, Pat McEwan, Fred Butler and J. O'Neill were all making a call on their old friend, Foley, but none of them would admit having ever used cocaine. In the case of one or two of the boys arrested, bail was offered by parents or friends, but Judge Leet said that he could not admit any of them to bail, as he felt that cocaine eaters must be dealt with very severely. They were all remanded for enquiry, with the exception of Butler, whom, on the recommendation of the detective, Judge Leet freed after a sharp lecture.

Bernard Foley, the alleged cocaine vendor, and Emily Decarie, a girl who was living with him, were arraigned on a charge of receiving stolen goods. They pleaded not guilty and were remanded. Foley tried to save the girl by saying that he had given her the goods found in her possession, but this piece of gallantry did not move Judge Leet.

Orville Trudeau, a young man with good family connections, was also before Judge Leet. Detective Gorman said that he brought him into court as an act of humanity with a view to having him punished. The detective said that he found young Trudeau in his room, half-dressed with drugs. Around him was all the necessary apparatus of the drug fiend, and under his pillow a loaded revolver. Judge Leet said that he was afraid he could not punish him, as there was really no charge against him, but that he would hold the boy and try to have his people take care of him. He warned the young man that even if he was freed this time he would not be long before he would be back in court again if he persisted in his pernicious habits.

NEW SOCIALIST PARTY

Toronto Paper Reports a Split "Local 24" Seceding From Body

(Toronto Telegram)

The Socialists in Canada are due for another split. A meeting of Local 24, of Toronto will be held at the headquarters of the body this evening for the purpose of seceding from the socialist party of Canada. It is understood that the members will vote for secession.

This local represents what is called the "revolutionary wing" of the Socialist party in Canada, under the leadership of Moses Baritz.

It is from this body that James Simpson resigned a few weeks ago as the result of a resolution passed by the local, whereby he was to submit his report on the financial condition of the party to the members of the local, and to them before sending it to the government. Since Mr. Simpson's retirement this body has been steadily becoming more radical in tone, and is generally known as the revolutionary party.

The ground on which the secession takes place is that the socialist party of Canada is not revolutionary enough for Local 24.

Last summer the socialist party sustained a larger split in the withdrawal of a great number of members from its ranks, who formed what is known as "The Social Democrat Party of Canada." This party claimed that the regular party was too revolutionary, and too antagonistic to the views of trades unionists. The social democrat party, of which R. A. Rigg, of Winnipeg, is secretary, is built on the line adopted by the German and British Socialist parties, and works in a number of ways hand in hand with trades unionism.

The claim of the social democrats is that the trade union movement is the economic arm of the movement, and socialism is the political arm.

Among the innumerable instances of remarkable bravery shown by children, few have recently stood out more clearly than that in which a little girl in Belleville saved her mother's life, according to the current news columns.

Maud Riesenberger, 9 years old, was present when her father entered the house and attempted to kill the wife and mother. It is said that the crazed man seized his wife with one hand, while he tried to fire bullets into her body from a pistol held in the other.

But the 9-year-old child, realizing that her mother was in great peril, intervened and every time her father prepared to fire she shook his arm so that the bullets went wild.

The woman fainted presently, and the man relinquished his hold and his design, but the little girl did not faint, nor does it appear that she left her mother so long as her help was needed.

It is not the province of the newspaper to determine what may have prompted the man in this case to commit his murderous assault. THE ST. JOHN FIGHT AGAINST WHITE PLAGUE

The St. John Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis will soon have their dispensary in the water and sewerage department building, corner of Carmarthen and Leinster streets, ready for the reception of patients. The rooms are being thoroughly renovated, carpenters and painters are at work, and when the furnishings are completed the dispensary will be well equipped for the campaign against tuberculosis.

The association have been put to a considerable expense in preparing for the work they have undertaken. Their nurse was sent to New York for three months to undergo special training, and she has returned with a knowledge of the most modern methods of combating the disease. A staff of medical men have volunteered their services. With the generous assistance of the public great progress is expected to be made towards stamping out this dreaded disease which is the cause of one-seventh of the deaths in St. John.

The Leeds-Hand Circle will have a moving picture performance in the Opera House on December 5 and 6, and from it they hope to realize a considerable sum of money to be added to the funds of the association.
