King George Visits the Front

With the British Army in France, via London, Aug. 15.—King George has been at the front for a week. He left to-day for England. His departure was the first information the majority of the troops had of his presence. As a matter of precaution his visit was kept secret.

There was no display, or big reviews, as on the occasion of his visit last fall. The King simply went about seeing all sections of the army at work and the fields it had won.

After a visit to the front, King George to-day issued a general order to the army in France, expressing his appreciation of the splendid condition and cheerful confidence of all ranks, and through his personal visits to be the scene of the late desperate struggle, his understanding of the demands made upon the courage of the men, and the physical endurance required to assail and capture positions prepared during the past two years, which were stoutly defended to the last.

"I realize not only the splendid work done in immediate touch with the enemy," says the general order, "but also the vast organizations behind the fighting line, honorable alike to the genius of their originators and to the hearts and hands of the workers. Everywhere there is proof that all the men and women are playing their part. I rejoice to think that their noble efforts are being heartily seconded by all classes at home."

After an allusion to the happy relations between the Allies' armies and the population were they are quartered, King George concludes his message as follows: "Do not think that I and your fellow countrymen forget the brave and endurance the armies have displayed during the two years' bitter conflict. These sacrifices have not been in vain. The arms of the Allies will never be laid down until our cause has triumphed. I return more than ever proud of you. May God guide you to victory."

The above despatch is the first information that King George had been to the front in France. On his last previous visit in October, 1915, the King was injured by a fall from his horse while inspecting troops.

Mrs. Stephen Earle and two children, of Cambridge, Mass., who has been visiting her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Earle, of Shearstown, left for home by Tuesday's train.
