"We are fighting for a worthy purpose, and we shall not lay down our arms until that purpose has been fully achieved."—H.M. The King.
TO THE PEOPLE OF THE EMPIRE—Every fighting unit we can send to the front means one step nearer peace.

WORKING TOGETHER.

More impressive than any day-to-day happenings in the world war, is the revolution which has of late become so apparent in the minds of the people of Canada. Two years ago—only one year ago—when an insignificant success was sufficient ground for rejoicing. Today a temporary check—though such are rare—creates disappointment as deep as elation was high over victories of eleven months ago. Instead of that scarcely hidden thread of further reverses which controlled our feelings in the earlier phases of the war, we now look forward to an uninterrupted advance. In place of the belief that German preparedness might prove an almost insurmountable obstacle, we see on the side of the Allies a preparedness of all that is necessary to the successful prosecution of the war. Far from the fear of what might eventuate through a scarcity of guns and shells, we know as a fact that there is practically no limit to the available munitions. That our armies, at all times and in all places, are able to exert their greatest efforts under the shadow of the shortage of ammunition. The miniature army sent to the continent from Britain, glorious in its struggle against overwhelming odds, has been succeeded by the new armies gathered from the four corners of the earth, and today in man-power, in munitions, in every branch of the military service, the Allies outmatch the Central nations and have, on every front covering thousands of miles, wrested the initiative from the enemy.

There are optimists who see in the present condition the beginning of the end. It is to be hoped that their vision may prove true, but to those who best realize the strength of Germany and her dupes, the present phase of the war is in reality the end of the beginning. The past two years have been a period of military preparation on the part of Britain, and to a lesser degree on the part of France. The same interval has seen one of diplomatic preparation, resulting in the active co-operation of Roumania, the gradual elimination of Greece as a possible enemy, the concentration of forces on lines where the most telling results are to be expected, and, as affects Britain alone, the reorganization of the Indian office. But perhaps the outstanding result, that development which alone has made possible the successful outcome of this great struggle, is the co-ordination of strategy on which soldiers and statesmen have been working for a year or more, and which became practically operative only a few months ago. In the earlier days, when each of the Allies went into business on its own account, we suffered the disastrous effect of ill-considered side shows, and of individual action which could not, even under the most favorable conditions, result in other than defeat. Perhaps Britain which is always trying experiments was most largely to blame. It was Britain which undertook in a very inefficient manner, the defence of Antwerp, and lost thousands of men. It was Britain which engineered the tragic expedition in Mesopotamia, leading to the surrender of General Townshend's forces at Kut-el-Amara. It was Britain which projected the awful struggle at the Dardanelles, a campaign now admitted to have been not only hopeless, but absolutely tragic. It was Russia which swept over the plains of Hungary with nothing but men to fight against heavy artillery. It was Russia which bravely attempted an invasion of Northern Germany, using bayonets and rifles against shrapnel and high explosives. It was Italy which, with heroism unsurpassed in this war, stormed the bristling mountain ranges, was caught, almost hemmed in, and swept back before the overwhelming Austrian advance.

But those days are over. There will be no more side-shows, no further dissipation of energy on expeditions which cannot seriously affect the outcome of the war. The Allied conference has settled all this, and now and hereafter army commanders work in absolute harmony. Russia, by a brilliant and far reaching offensive saved Italy from serious inconvenience at the hands of Austria. Pressure exerted against the further advance of the Czar's forces has been relieved by the Anglo-French offensive on the west. The British assault, made in co-operation with Joffre's men, masked General Foch's brilliant movement on the Somme. On all fronts leaders are working in concert, supplementing each other's activities, exerting pressure wherever it is needed to relieve the tension at other points, and, in one common movement gradually forcing Germany, Austria, Turkey, etc., to their utmost endeavors on all lines. This will not result in a speedy ending of the war, but it brings the finish appreciably nearer, for only by such united action can success be obtained.

PRESS BUREAU STUFF.

Yesterday morning's despatches contained a report, emanating from Amsterdam, that a serious political crisis is imminent in Germany. This report went on to say that efforts toward the overthrow of the Imperial Chancellor, Von Bethmann-Holweg, are being put forth by the militarist party, and that a certain section of the Reichstag is in revolt against existing political and military conditions. Such yarns should be taken with more than the proverbial pinch of salt. It is evident that this story in common with many others which have preceded it, has been handed out by official Germany for purely German purposes.

Many of us on reading the mass of this and other stuff which is offered to newspapers as part of the German propaganda, might readily reach the conclusion that all German soldiers not actively engaged in the trenches are busy turning machine guns on mobs of starving women and children in alleged food riots. Were we to follow this line further back it might be learned from the same source that Germany's strength was seriously impaired a few days after she set foot in Belgium. Certain it is that despite such as this is officially prepared and officially distributed by a part of Germany's military organization, and that the dissemination of false information calculated to create a mistaken idea of her internal conditions and thus perhaps lead to a relaxation of effort on the part of her opponents, is in line with Germany's whole plan of campaign.

As has previously been pointed out in this paper, political conditions and modes of government in Germany are so entirely contrary to our own ideas that it is difficult, without keeping those facts constantly in mind, to give only proper consideration to the various financial and exaggerated reports submitted from German sources for our edification. In the first place, Germany for thirty years carried on active preparations for the present war. Germany was at peace, and it was known in a general sort of way that her military activities were of some importance. But the real facts were not known even to the leaders of British public opinion. This is certain, for had such facts been known Britain's unpreparedness could only be regarded as arising from criminal neglect. Thus since the real condition of affairs was kept secret with Germany at peace, it should not be imagined that the true state of things can be made known to irresponsible news agencies in Holland, Switzerland, Sweden and elsewhere, now, when Germany is at war, and only such information may be given out as is permitted by the government. Again, what matter if the Imperial Chancellor should lose his job? He is only a figurehead anyway. The Chancellor of Germany is no more and no less than private secretary to the Emperor. He represents his master in the Reichstag—largely as a matter of courtesy on the master's part, for the Reichstag itself is a non-entity in German administration. Did it happen that Bethmann-Holweg held a position corresponding to the premiership of a nation enjoying popular government, the matter would be open to a very different interpretation. But in Germany, the Emperor is absolute ruler, and conducts the affairs of the country in a time such as this with the co-operation of the great general staff. It is perhaps true that in this general staff there are jealousies, and that partisanship is not unknown. It is very probable that men of the type of Tirpitz and Hindenburg are somewhat out of agreement with Bethmann-Holweg's more moderate ideas on the conduct of the war. But these differences of opinion, if they exist at all, are for home consumption only, and in so far as the relations of Germany with the outside world are concerned, the Emperor and the general staff stand united, and stand for Germany. It makes not the slightest difference in the conduct of the war whether Bethmann-Holweg, the Imperial Chancellor, is deposed or not. Von Buelow is looking for the job, it would seem, but neither Von Buelow nor Bethmann-Holweg is a Bismarck, and since the days of Germany's Man of Iron, the Imperial Chancellorship has lost much of its former importance. So long as the Reichstag cares to amuse itself with purely partisan or personal disputes, so long will the German press bureau have a good excuse for endeavoring to mislead foreign opinion. But in so far as having any effect on the administration of Germany is concerned, these disputes might just as well be school-boy squabbles.

UNIQUE IN LINE WITH NEW YORK'S BIGGEST PICTURE THEATRES

Novel Orchestra and New Serial Next Week.

Two features, features in every sense of the word, will be inaugurated at the Unique Theatre next Monday, when the first installment of the wonderful serial, "The Shielding Shadow" will be presented in conjunction with the first appearance of an especially engaged organization of talented musicians known as the Arlington Musical Orchestra, under the direction of Miss Mae Davis. This will place the Unique in a class by itself entirely, and the manner in which every programme will be set with music will represent, on a smaller scale of course, the same idea exactly as has made the Broadway Theatre in New York so popular. The Arlington Orchestra have won laurels in musical circles in the large American centers, while "The Shielding Shadow" is proving to be the greatest serial yet produced.

MARRIAGES.

Waterbury-Reader.

Petticoat, N. B., Sept. 25.—A very pretty but quiet wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Reader, Salisbury, on Saturday, Sept. 23, at twelve o'clock, when their eldest daughter, Sarah Field, was united in marriage to Mr. Harry P. Waterbury, of Petticoat. The ceremony was performed by Rev. James Crisp of the Anglican Church. The bride, who is an uncle of the bridegroom, was the daughter of the late friends and relatives. The bride was becomingly gowned in white silk with lace trimmings and carried a bouquet of bridal roses and maiden hair fern.

After the ceremony and congratulations the party retired to the dining room where a chicken dinner was served and Mr. and Mrs. Waterbury left on the C. P. R. in the afternoon for New England cities, followed by the good wishes of their many friends. A large crowd were at the depot to wish them "bon voyage." Returning they will reside in their home at Petticoat.

The bride travelled in a royal blue suit with hat to match and was the recipient of many beautiful gifts, including glass, linen, silver, cash and furniture.

Little Benny's Note Book

I asked ma to give me a dime to buy a skool companion to put pencils and things in, and while she was giving it to me I sed, You awt to see the peachy ones you can get for 15 cents, ma, can I get a 15 cent one, they got flowers on and all.

Wat good do the flowers do, sed ma. They make it beutifull, I sed. And ma gave me 15 cents to buy a 15 cent one, and while ma was giving it to me I sed, You awt to see the peachy ones you can get for 15 cents, ma, can I get a 15 cent one, they got flowers on and all.

So am I, sed Mary Watkins, Im going to buy a 25 sent one, I wood-ent have any uther kind, I wood-ent.

Neither wood I, I sed. Wares your 25 cents, sed Mary Watkins. I got it, I sed. And I jigled the 15 cents in my pocket and we went into Mommy Simminses and Mary Watkins sed, I want a 35 sent skool companion, I want the big red one in the window. Wich Mommy Simminses took it out of the window and gave it to her, and I sed, I want one, to.

Wat price? sed Mommy Simminses, and I sed, Heh? and she sed, Wat price? and I sed, 25 sent one left, sed Mommy Simminses. Thares only one more 25 sent one I dropped my 15 cents on the floor, saying, O thare goes my 25 cents. And me and Mary Watkins and Mommy Simminses hunted for it, hunting about 20 minits and we cood only find a dime, so I had to buy a dime one after all. Proving if you perend your going to get more than your reely going to get, sumtimes you dont even get as much as you thawt you was going to get.
