DAIRY PRODUCE .- Butter. The market is in a demoralized condition at present owing to the reports from the other side which are unfavorable. A good deal of high priced butter which has been going forward is now being forced on the market, and the price is being consequently much lowered. Prices here are nominal at present, but lower than have been quoted. Cheese is steady at 12c to 121c per Ib.

Hog PRODUCTS are unchanged. Asnes are steady at $5.05 to 5.15 per 100 Ibs. for Pots.

Boots AND SHOES.—The demand for heavy whater wear has increased, consequent upon the snow and colder weather, and dealers find it difficult to fill order: promptly. Jobbers throughout the country are pushing manufac-turers for goods. The travellers have nearly all returned, and the majority of houses will be taking stock next week. Payments were never better, in fact several houses report that "money is coming in more freely than at any time dur-ting the next ten vears." many noise having them ing the past ten years," many notes having been paid before maturity.

LEATHER. --Market quiet, very little business doing, Oanada calf and good straight lots of Waxed Upper reported scarce. The only quota-ble sale reported here was that of six tons Quebec splits at 26c. A Liverpool buyer return-ing from Western markets contrasted for some 50,000 tons splits in Quebec, the greater part to be shipped immediately to England on consign-ment, and for the remainder he agreed to pay 24c. less 24 per cent. off. It is stated that a like quantity is to collow this shipment as soon as the leather can be got ready, and as this will materially lessen the supply in Quebec it is though by some that prices may become af-fected thereby. Of domestic wools, manu-facturers are buying moderate quantities, as necessity requires. No large sales reported. For foreign descriptions the market is decidedly stronger, and some 500 bals of Cape wool have been sold in lots, at full prices; stocks of this kind are held principally by one local firm; and there is a probability of an early advance there-fore.

Very few shipping cattle were to be found, and butchers complained of the small quantity of good beef cattle available. Sales were made at 4 to 41c per lb, live weight, for good butchers' cattle, and laterior. Strength "Yes, it is he. Poor, toolish micros. The horse market has been rather quiet since our last report, fewer sales having been made both on foreign and local account. SARA BERNHARDT.

THE ROMANCE OF HER LIFE.

WHILE fashionable and pleasure-loving New Yorkers are crowding in thousands nightly to witness the acting and applaud the genius of the great French tragic attiste, few, if any, among the entranced audiences who admire her splendid stateliness and her thrilling love-making on the stage are aware of the one real romance that clouded her life, and the unfortunate denouement of which is still recalled by her in leisure moments with a pang of genuine serrow. One of her intimate professional acquaintances thus relates the story :

"Ah!" sighed Same one day to her companions in the Paris theatre before she became the great artist she now is, "it is a troublesome thing to have a heart ! "

"Ha! ha!" laughed the dugazon of the company. "That is conceit, mademoiselle : what ! you complain of having a heart ! Pardonnez moi. What part are you rehearsing now? You cannot refer to yourself," she went on banteringly.

"Yes, even 1 have a heart," Sara replied. with a tinge of sarcasm and reproach in her tones.

"Tell us your romance," one of the party asked in a conciliatory tone. "Who is the cavalier who has stormed the citadel of your affections? Let us know the hero, for he must be one.

"You have noticed young Michel, who was at the stage door last night?" Sara asked, looking toward the door, as if expecting some one to enter. "Yes, yes," they all replied, impressed with the mysterious manner in which Sara acted. "He is there every night with a bouquet, looking pale, anxious, and lonely. 'It cannot be he who troubles you," continued the lo-with expectancy. "But," put in one of the cynical gentlemen of the company, "why do you treat him so coldly when he greets you? If you love him earnestly, how can you explain your actions? Mont de ma vie, all you have got to do is-"

"Stop," said Bernhardt; "I love him in earnest, and---'

"Very well, then; all the better," interrupted the gentleman.

"And, alss ! he loves me."

"Better still." "He is from my province. He knew me when I was young-a peasant girl-and he a boy, who regarded me as a sister. At least I thought that was all. But now-" "Ah now," and each of the listeners looked at each other with sly winks, thinking that last sigh was indicative of a weakness that would lead the grand artise to tender revelations.

But she opened not her mouth. Resuming her habitual frigidity and stateliness of man. ner, she left the gossiping group more mysti fied than over.

The following night the boy-he could be called nothing else-was at his place in the dark alleyway that led to the stage door. The slight and flippant remarks of passers by he heeded not. One kind word or look from Bernhardt repaid him for all. She gave him both, but not generously, nor frequently. She could not afford to. Or, rather, ruthless ambition would not let her. The poor peasant boy would wait through again. From his lonely place of vigil he heard the shouts of applause, mingled with music, and his heart would grow light as he pictured his peasant love bowing and smiling before the footlights, the public idol as well as his. But this pleasing thought gave way the next moment to jealousy.

Sara sighed, and told her friends sadly the story of her self-sacrifice, and how she had cured her lover of his infatuation. At the end of the week there came a shocking revelation in the daily journals of Paris. In an obscure lodging-a garret in the Latin quarter-the police had broken into an apartment whose occupant had not been seen to go in or out for several days, and the body of Michel was found in an advanced state of decomposition. A letter dated the night of the interview told the story of his folly.

The next day the Parisian papers rang with the discovery, and the Bohemians wove tanciful stories out of the tragedy for days after, greatly to the delight of the The large business we have built up in such a short time is the result of giving good value, and of selling a class of goods that give general satisfaction. Very little common fruit offering; altogether about 35,000 barrels held here, against 45,000 at like period of last year. FURS —Since the snowfall, trads has been quite brisk, and manufacturers are having all they can possibly do to fill orders to suit aus-tomers. HARDWARE AND IRON.—The fail trade is over, navigation being closed, and business in hard-ware houses is again quiet, confined almost to a small, local demand and in filling remnant torders, taken some time ago. FARMERS' MARKET-Nov. 30.

The want of sufficient snow on many parts of the roads in the country as well as in the city deters the farmers from bringing their produce so freely to the market as is desirable, consequently the supply of most kinds of produce is not large and prices are firm. There are no changes to note in the prices of grain, although the farmers are asking more for it to-day than on last Friday. Roots and vegetables are fairly supplied at former rates. with a firmer feeling in the value of good celery and cabbage. There is no change worth noting in the fruit market, except that frost-bitten potatoes are abundant, and seil at from fitty cents to $1.50 per barrel. We are not so badly off in this respect as in some of the Western cities, 200,000 barrels of apples in Chicago alone have been more or less damaged by the late hard frosts. Dressed hogs and beef quarters were fairly plentiful, and sold at former rates. Dressed poultry were rather scarce, and slightly higher-priced Tub butter of poor quality is plentiful at former rates; there is no change in print butter ; a choice article still brings 35c per 1b. The price of eggs is on the advance. There is no change in the retail prices of flour, meal and feed. She loved the public better than him. He was learning this night by night from bitter experience. It was breaking his heart. There was a new drama produced at the Gymnase. Sara was cast in a part which would test her talents and demonstrate whether her aspirations were based on conceit or genuine merit.

She scored a victory. On this night she left the theatre laaning on the arm of a fine cavalier-one of the kind who always fawn where it will do the most good, personally. As she passed along the alleyway, chatting gayly, flushed with her first success, she came face to face, as usual, with the pale, love-sick boy. There was a remarkable change in her manner. She was no longer cold and haughty toward him. She smiled on him, stopped and spoke in the old tones, and acted like the Sara Bernhardt of his youth. It might have been acting, but the poor, mad boy did not think so. His heart throbbed with delight. His face became radiant with pleasure. To the astonishment of those who followed her and stopped to gaze curiously at the strange tableau, she dismissed her escort in her most peremptory tones, and invited her compatriot, the lover of her youth, to occupy a place in her carriage.

Arriving at the door of her sumptuous lodging, Sara alighted from the carriage, and stood on the pavement in the shadow of the lamp, the boy looking wistfully into her face

Taking his hand in hers she expatiated with him on the folly of his actions, assuring him that his best course was to forget her, and go away to his country home and hestow his affections on some one more worthy of them than her. Her advice was given in the spirit of a sister.

The foolish boy protested ardently against this cruel decision, and urged her to leave Paris, with its temptations, behind. He would give her a home, would love her as his life; begged her fervently to recall the pledges of her youth. But in vain. Sara sternly forbade him mention the subject of love again, and commanded him to leave Paris the next day. "You will not deny me the pleasure of being near you?" the youth protested, his breast heaving with emotion.

"I do not want you near me," she replied petulantly. "That is just what annoys me. I am not myself while you are in Paris. Everywhere I go 1 am pursued by those great wild eyes of yours. On the stage they make me forget the duties of the play; in the street they startle me; in my dreams terrify me! Leave me. Love between us is helpless, Go away, if you love me indeed. Let me never see your face again !"

"Never-see-your-face-again! Do you mean that !" cried Michel wildly.
