

nd that the twisted and

t off up the uch more ate given any a moment s of his overegs, and the cap wagging

s a man who rld are going n one comes amusing and (and passionat a stir he world! We rom the very dd stranger. ould not help t I was fol-nder full sail and as I apted as to the myself, "that

nd boarding. over of bold st gun firstongside, "you he signs."

ng the road." conds with a face. sign man," I

't any sign

opointed, but determined to ure aboardthe procedure

self," I said, seriously, inhis round

ssport?" he ned, mystified ssport. Let he looked at nd then took re in one of ike, in a way aid he, "you was a bit of to return it in his face a travel like through my road side by beating first against mine, er, "that we

with some-

s all in the

nd faced me. , he pointed on his coat

Cilburn," said n' there, and nen on every are watchin'

It seemed as though these words suddenly opened a whole new world around me-a world I had heard about for years, but never entered. And the tone in which he had used the word "capitalist!" I had almost to glance around to make sure that there were no ravening capitalists hiding behind the trees. "So you are a Socialist," I said.

"Yes," he answered. "I'm one of those dangerous persons."

First and last I have read much of Socialism, and thought about it, too, from the quiet angle of my farm among the hills, but this was the first time I had ever had a live Socialist on my arm. I could not have been more surprised if the stranger had said, "Yes, I am Theodore Roosevelt."

One of the discoveries we keep making all our life long (provided we remain humble), is the humorous discovery of the ordinariness of the extraordinary. Here was this disrupter of society, this man of the red flag-here he was with his mild spectacled eyes and his furry ears wagging as he walked. It was unbelievable !-and the sun shining on him quite as impartially as it shone on me.

Coming at last to a pleasant bit of woodland, where a stream ran under the roadway, I said:

"Stranger, let's sit down and have a bite of luncheon.

He began to expostulate, said he was expected in Kilburn.

"Oh, I've plenty for two," I said, "and I can say, at least, that I am a firm believer in co-operation."

Without more urging he followed me into the woods, where we sat down comfortably under a tree.

Now, when I take a fine, thick sandwich out of my bag I always feel like making it a polite bow, and before I bite into a big brown doughnut, I am tempted to say, "By your leave, madam," and as for mince pie—Beau Brummel himself could not outdo me in to exert themselves --respectful consideration. But Bill Hahn neither saw, nor smelled, nor, I think, and your sons and daughters?" tasted Mrs. Ransome's cookery. As soon as we sat down he began talking. From time to time he would reach out for another sandwich or doughnut or pickle (without knowing in the least which he was getting), and when that was gone some reflex impulse caused him to reach out for some more. When the scars. last crumb of our luncheon had disappeared, Bill Hahn still reached out. His hand groped absently about, and coming in contact with no more doughnuts or pickles he withdrew it—and did not know, I think, that the meal was finished. (Confidentially, I have speculated take them by the hand. on what might have happened if the supply had been unlimited!) But that was Bill Hahn. Once started in his talk, he never thought of food or clothing or shelter; but his eyes glowed, his face lighted up with a strange effulgence, and he quite lost himself upon the tide of his own oratory. I saw him afterward by a flare-light at the center of a great crowd of men and women-but that is getting ahead of my story. His talk bristled with such words as "capitalism," "proletariat," "class - consciousness"-and he spoke with fluency of "economic determinism" and "syndicalism." It was quite wonderful! And from time to time, he would bring in a smashing quotation from Aristotle, Na-Poleon, Karl Marx, or Eugene V. Debs. . giving them all equal values, and he cited statistics !-oh, marvellous statistics, that never were on sea or land. Once he was so swept away by his own eloquence that he sprang to his feet and. raising one hand high above his head (quite unconscious that he was holding up a dill pickle), he worked through one of his most thrilling periods. Yes, I laughed, and yet there was so brave a simplicity about this odd, absurd little man that what I laughed at was only his outward appearance (and that he himself had no care for), and all the time I felt a growing respect and admiration for him. He was not only sincere, but he was genuinely simple—a much higher virtue, as Fenelon says. For while sincere people do not aim at appearing anything but what they are. they are always in fear of passing for something they are not. They are forever thinking about themselves, weighing ing upon what they have done, in the of a molten pit-so that the glare burt little, whereas simplicity, as Fenelon again into quite narrative.

purge himself of himself. I think if I had been in that group, nineteen hundred eyes now looked out upon the glories of unions. the world, I should have been among the questioners

"What did He to thee? How opened He thine eves?"

I tried ineffectually several times to break the swift current of his oratory, and finally succeeded (when he paused a moment to finish off a bit of pie crust).

"You must have seen some hard experiences in your life," I said.

says, is an uprightness of soul which has Like most working people, he had ceased wholly to dwell upon itself or its never lived in the twentieth century at actions. Thus there are plenty of sin- all. He was still in the feudal age, and cere folk in the world, but few who are his whole life had been a blind and caseless struggle for the bare necessaries of Well, the longer he talked, the less in- life, broken from time to time by fierce. terested I was in what he said and the irregular wars, called strikes. He ad more fascinated I became in what he was. never known anything of a real self-I felt a wistful interest in him: and I governing commonwealth, and such p. gwanted to know what way he took to ress as he and his kind had made was never the result of their citizenship, of their power as voters, but grew out of years ago, which surrounded the beggar the explosive and ragged upheavals of who was born blind, but whose anointed their own half-organized societies and

> It was against the "black people" he said that he was first on strike nack in the early nineties. He told me all shout it, how he had been working in the mills pretty comfortably-he was young and strong then, with a fine growing family and a small home of his own.

> "It was as pretty a place as you would want to see," he said; "we grew cabbages and orions and turnips-ever thing carnot convey the strange excitement fear of having done too much or too one !—and then the story would die back "the woman was a good manager"—until one day he had the misfortune to get his hand caught in the machinery. It was a place which should have been protected with guards, but was not. He was loid up for several weeks, and the company, claiming that the accident was due to his own stupidity and carelessness. refused even to pay his wages while he was idle. Well, the family had to live somehow, and the woman and the daughter-'she was a little thing," he said, "and frail"—the woman and the daughter went into the mill. But even with this new source of income they began to fall behind. Money which should have gone toward making the last payments on their home (already long delayed by the strike) had now to go to the doctor and > the grocer. "We had to live," said Bill Hahn.

Again and again he used this same phrase, "We had to live!" as a sort of bedrock explanation for all the woes of

After a time, with one finger gone and a frightfully scarred hand-he held it up for me to see-he went back into the

"But it kept getting worse and worse," said he, "and finally I couldn't stand it any longer."

He and a group of friends got together secretly and tried to organize a union, tried to get the workmen together to improve their own conditions; but in some way ("they had spies everywhere," he said,) the manager learned of the attempt, and one morning when he reported at the mill he was handed a slip a-king him to call for his wages, that his help was no longer required.

'I'd been with that company for twenty years and four months," he said bitterly, "I'd helped in my small way to build it up, make it a big concern, payin' 28 per cent. dividends every year; I'd given part of my right hand doin' it-and they threw me out like an o.d

He said he would have pulled up and gone away, but he still had the little home and the garden, and his wife and daughter were still at work, so he hung on grimly, trying to get some other job. 'But what good is a man for any other sort of work," he said, "when he has been trained to the mills for thirty-two years !"

It was not very long after that when the "great strike" began-indeed, it grew out of the organization which he had tried to launch-and Bill Hahn threw himself into it with all his strength. He was one of the leaders. I shall not attempt to repeat here his description of the bitter struggle, the coming of the soldiery, the street riots, the long lists of arrests ("some," said he, "got into jail on purpose, so that they could at least have enough to eat !"), the late meetings of strikers, the wild turmoil and excitement.

Of all this he told me, and then he stopped suddenly, and after a long pause he said in a low voice:

"Comrade, did you ever see your wife and your kids sufferin' for bread to eat?'

He paused again with a hard, dry sob in his voice. "Did ye ever see that?"

"No," said I, very humbly, "I have never seen anything like that."

He turned on me suddenly, and I shall never forget the look on his face, nor the blaze in his eyes: "Then what can you know about workingmen !"

What could I answer?

A moment passed and then he said, as if a little remorseful at having turned thus upon me:

"Comrade, I tell you, the iron entered my soul-them days."

It seems that the leaders of the strike were mostly old employees like Bill Hahn, and the company had conceived the idea that if these men could be eliminated the organization would col-And presently the strike collapsed, and lapse, and the strikers be forced back to the workers rushed helter-skelter back to work. One day Bill Hahn found that proceedings had been started to turn him out of his home, upon which he had not been able to keep up his payments, and at the same time the merchant, of whom by the eager "black people," and many he had been a respected customer for

"But we lived somehow," he said, "we lived and we fought."

Lancashire Agricultural Society's Pavilion. Used as a hospital for wounded soldiers.

"That I have," responded Bill Haln. 'the capitalistic system -

"Did you ever work in the mills youself?" I interrupted hastily.

"Boy and man," said Bill Hahn. "I worked in that hell for thirty-two years--The class-conscious proletariat have only

"And your wife, did she work, too-A spasm of pain crossed his face.

"My daughter?" he said. "They killed her in the mills." It was appalling—the dead level of the tone in which he uttered those worls,the monotone of an emotion long ago burned out, and yet leaving frightful "My friend!" I exclaimed, and I could mothers, to say nothing of babies, denot help laying my hand on his arm I had the feeling I often have with that they have had to pass through the brought you to your present belief?'

troubled children—an indescribable pity "And was this—your daughter--what valley of the shadow, and I not there to dull monotone of the long bitterness of grew fine !-in the garden behind the And then the "black people" began to come in, little by little at first, and then by the carload. By the "black people" he meant the people from Southern Europe, he called them "hordes"—"hordes and hordes of 'em''-Italians mostly, and they began getting into the mills and underbidding for the jobs, so that wages slowly went down, and at the same time the machines were speeded up. It seems that many of these "black people" were single men, or vigorous young married people with only themselves to support, while the old American workers were men with families and little homes to say for, and plenty of old grandfathers and grand-

pending upon them. "There wasn't a living for a General family left," he said.

So they struck—and he told me in his that strike, the empty cupboards, the approach of winter with no coal for the stoves and no warm clothing for the Interior View of Lancashire Agricultural Society's Pavilion.

Showing wounded soldiers and nurses.

up. That is, I called myself a Socialist, but, comrade. I've learned this here truth: that it ain't of so much upportance that you possess a belief, as that the belief possesses you. Do you under- the woman and the children!"

stand?' "I think," said I. "that I understand." a curious, dull, detached way-as though terly, he were speaking of some third person in whom he felt only a brotherly interest, narrative, like the opening of the door

"No," said he; "oh, no. I was a children. He told me that many of the old Socialist, as you might say, from youth workers began to leave the town (some bound for the larger cities, some for the Far West).

"But." said he with a sudden outburst of emotion, "I couldn't leave. I had the mills to get their old jobs. Beg-Well, he told me his story, mostly in ging like whipped dogs," he said 5't-

Many of them found their places taken whom he left only a visual respected customer for but from time to time some incident or had to go to work at lower wages in years, refused to give him any further observation would flame up out of the poorer places—punished for the fight they credit.

But he got along somehow, he said-