you through your college course. I have watched you carefully these two years in the chair of English. You are doing well. The students like you. We are satisfied as it is."

She had always felt that if at any time she came to this grand man with a burden he would care and help her lift it, she she had not come until she must.

"Do you know, my child—pardon me, but so twenty-seven seems to be seventy-seven—your predecessor was here fifteen years?"

"Yes, sir; I know it."

"And if you resign and another takes your place, there may be a vacancy for as long or longer?"

"I have thought of that, and there is no chair in this college, there is no place in the world, I'd rather teach than right here as I am now doing."

In answering any advertisement is desirable you should mention The Canadian Churchman.

"Then why do you let it slip out of your hands?"

"My parents need me. They sacrificed much in giving me an education. They have always thought of their children first, and now they are old. They have the first claim on me."

"You have brothers and sisters. Why can't some of them go to your parents?"

"They are all married."

"You are certainly as much tied. You've spent years in fitting yourself for this place, and now you give it up. What will you do at home?"

"Take care of my father, who has had a painful accident, and of my mother, who at the same time had a slight stroke of paralysis, and is very frail. I feel that I must go now and stay with them as long as they live. They are both past seventy, and will not be with us many years."

"My mother lived to be over ninety years old; so may yours. Think of twenty of your best years for growth and study. Will you give up all your ambitions for advancement in your chosen work, your plan of a tour abroad and be contented to be nurse, cook and housekeeper?"

"Please, doctor, don't make it so hard for me. Maybe some time I can take up teaching again, somewhere if not here, but I can't leave the old folk now, I'll have to hide a wee."

"I want to make it hard for you, my dear; we don't want to lose you. Bring your father and mother over here, or let them go to some of their other children's homes."

"Oh, doctor, they never would be happy anywhere else. I believe it would kill them to leave the old home where they've lived fifty years. They've taken deep root. My sister is with them now, and will stay until I can come. I spent a day at home this week, and told them I'd come back in June to stay. You don't know how happy it made them."

"Were they willing you should make such a sacrifice?"

"I didn't let them think it a sacrifice."

"Can't you get a nurse to take care of them? You can better afford to do that than lose your place here."

"They won't have a nurse. No, it will not do. They want me. I've thought it over and over, and, doctor, I know it is my duty to go."

"Duty," said the great man, slowly. "Well, well, don't be hasty in this. I won't say anything to the board about it just now. You think and pray over it, as I suppose you've been doing. Maybe the Lord will show you some other way out of the tangle. It's my opinion that duty never points two ways at once. There'll be a hundred applicants for your position if we give out that you've resigned. Spare us if you can, little woman."

After shaking hands cordially again, he walked off.

The young professor felt very young indeed as she stood looking after the bent figure. Her thoughts were something like this: "In years there is wisdom. He is a statesman. He has been one of our nation's counsellors. Maybe he is right. This campus was never more beautiful than now. How I'll miss it all! There comes a bunch of pretty girls in smiles and bright shirt waists—a bouquet of gladness. There are the boys on the foot-ball ground. The championship of these students means—oh, so much! I believe maybe they'll miss me. The atmosphere of a college is different from any other place under heaven. It has the breath of life in it. It is developing, stimulating, exhilarating! Must I give it up? Oh, how I love this work!"

She threw back her head, taking a long, deep breath of the fragrant spring air. She looked up and down over the lovely grounds, from one stately building to another, then with heart and eyes full, murmured softly to herself:

When duty whispers, "Lo, thou must,"
The youth replies, "I can."

She did not wait for the good times as commencement. She must get home as soon as possible, so when "exams" were over, she packed her trunks.

The crowd of students at the station to see Miss Fairweather off on her train parted to let in the venerable form of the president of the board of trustees. The girls were all sniffing, the boys gallantly offering their big handkerchiefs, as the tiny lace ones had been long ago soaked. Miss Fairweather was a favourite.

She had kept herself calm, now and then brushing away a tear as some emotional girl would throw her arm about her, sobbing that they'd "all miss her awfully." She promised to come back if possible to see them all graduate.

But when the beloved doctor, idol of the students and faculty, took her hand to say good-bye, and she began: "How good of you, doctor, to—" her voice failed, and her eyes were dim. She heard him saying: "God bless you, my brave girl. I wish I had such a daughter. Remember, if the way opens for you to come back, you are to have your place again, if you don't stay too long."

She thanked him through her tears. Then the train pulled in. The college yell, a flutter of handkerchiefs and a flourish of college colours was the good-bye.

She came back. Before the year was out her dear parents had answered the call to come up higher. All her life the loving daughter was glad she had forgotten self and had done for them what she could. Higher honours awaited her. In losing her life she had found it.

ONE OF ELI PERKINS' ANECDOTES.

A shrewd, worldly agnostic and a Christian clergyman dressed in a modest clerical suit, said Eli Perkins, sat at the same table in the Pullman dining car. They were waiting for the first course at the dinner, a delicious Hudson River shad. Eyeing his companion coldly for a moment, the agnostic remarked:

"I judge you are a clergyman, sir?"

"Yes, sir; I am in my Master's service."

"Yes, you look it. Preach out of the Bible, don't you?"

"O, yes; of course."

"Find a good many things in that old book that you don't understand—don't you?"

"Oh, yes; some things."

"Well, what do you do then?"

"Why, my dear friend, I simply do just as we do while eating this delicious shad. If I come to a bone I quietly lay it one side and go on enjoying the shad, and let some fool insist on choking himself with the bones."

There is a duty of prayer most sacred and holy, but prayer is by no means the only duty. The answer will never come while we stay on our knees, but only when we rise up and go forward.

Kidneys Affected By Sudden Change

The sudden lowering of the temperature causes the pores of the skin to close, and thus throws on to the kidneys much work which is ordinarily performed by the skin. This, no doubt, accounts for the great prevalence of kidney disease during the fall and winter.

There is no treatment which so quickly affords relief to overworked and deranged kidneys as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, because they act on the liver, as well as the kidneys, and when in healthful action the liver does much of the work of filtering the blood, which is otherwise left for the kidneys.

Bright's Disease, dropsy, uric acid poisoning, stone in the bladder, and rheumatism are among the most painful forms of kidney disease, and these ailments can always be prevented by the timely use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They can also usually be cured by this treatment, but if you are so fortunate as to be yet free of these dreadful ailments, keep so by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to keep the liver kidneys and bowels in healthful working condition. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.
