Not Necessarily Vain

Because a man desires to keep his hands soft and white it does not necessarily follow that he is vain. Clean, soft, white hands are as desirable as a clean face, and there is nothing that will keep both hands and face in proper condition like CAMPANA'S ITALIAN BALM. It is delightfully cool and soothing, and entirely free from grease or oil.—E. G. WEST & CO., Wholesale Druggists, 80 George St., Toronto.

NORTHWAY GARMENTS KEEP THEIR SHAPE

Mrs. M. M. B. B. An altar play book and hymnal, bound in red leather, were given in memory of Mrs. Frances Johnson, two brass altar cases were the gift of Mrs. Edgar Franklin Munson of Williamsport, Pa.; an artistic screen for chapel use was given by Miss Lillian Gibbs; covers and ribbons for silk veil rolls by Mrs. Arthur Gibbs; a beautiful work box containing all the necessary articles for repairs, by Miss Frances Wood; a drawn-work pax-veil by Mrs. G. Oliver, and a drawn-work credence cloth by Mrs. F. Blakeslee of Pittsburg, Pa. The body of the church has been still further beautified by the addition of a brass eagle lectern of exquisite pattern, elegant in its simplicity, a memorial by Miss Anna Huson of her father and mother.

THE ELDER TREE.

It is strange how the elder, so well known to us all, so handsome and so useful, has been in the past surrounded by cruel legends, that while it has been such a boon and blessing to thousands of homes, it should have borne such an ill name amongst the superstitious and ignorant. It speaks well, though, for the good properties of the tree, or for the common sense of many of us, that it has at last triumphed over its evil reputation and is now only remembered for its good one.

Judas Iscariot was said to have hung himself on an elder-tree, and in one great historian's time it was said the very tree was still to be seen in the Holy Land. In Scotland, the story ran that the Cross on which our Lord was crucified was made of elder, and for that reason the elder-tree has never since grown to more than a bush. But it has also been said that the Cross on which Jesus suffered was made of the wood of the aspen-tree, and that the leaves have never since ceased quivering with horror of the deed. Shakespeare speaks of Judas having hanged himself on an elder-tree. I wonder if any of my nephews and nieces can tell me where he mentions it? I know many are readers of Shakespeare.

Another proof of the tragic story is, so they say in the west of England, that the berries, which once were white and very good to eat, are now black, and the robin—the Holy Bird, as some call him, never will touch them. Human beings, I suppose, have more blunted feelings than Master Robin, for we use the berries freely for wine, and the buds for pickles, and the flowers for wines and medicines, and all manner of useful things. In fact, they say that there is no disease "from head to foot" that the elder will not heal.

It will show how foolish the old superstitions are when I tell you that in some places it is considered unlucky to bring elder into the house, yet it is supposed to protect one from storms and evil spells. Must one stand and hold it out of the window, or hang it up outside the house, I wonder! They say, too, that a fire will not burn if a bit of elder is amongst the sticks used in it. Well, that we can easily prove, cannot we?

THE NEW NEIGHBOUR.

"Mamma," cried Louise, running in from play one day, "some one is moving into the big house."

"Is that so?" said Mamma Baker, smiling.

"Yes, and they have a little girl about my size, and I saw her sitting on the porch."

"Well, that is nice. You will have a little girl to play with now."

"Yes, but they are rich, and have such nice things, and the little girl has such a nice dress. I don't think she will want to play with me. I 'spect she's stuck-up."

"You must not say that, dear. You must not judge too soon," said mamma, gently. Mrs. Baker turned to her sewing and Louise ran out to watch the little girl at the big house.

Every day she had something to say of the new girl, but she did not like her any better than at first.

"Mamma, I just can't stand that girl," she would say. "She is so proud of her nice dresses and pretty playthings."

"You do not know her well yet. You will like her better when you know her," her mother would say.

"No, I won't. I don't think I will ever like her."

One day, about a week later, it had had to stay indoors. But it stopped about noon, and she went out to see the pretty rainbow that spanned the western skies. Directly she came running in, carrying a pretty white kitten which was very wet.

"Oh, mamma," she cried, "look at this pretty kitty! Isn't it pretty? May I have it for my own, mamma?"

"Yes, dear, if you cannot find the owner. It may be some one's pet, you know, who wants it as much as you do."

Louise's face fell.

"I want to keep it," she pouted.

"Well, at any rate," said mamma, cheerfully, "you may keep it until it is dry, and then you had better take it to the big house. I expect it belongs to that little 'girl.'"

Louise had thought of that too.

Such a good Soup.

Such a little price.

Such a thick, nourishing, strengthening soup is Edwards'; so small is the cost that everyone can well afford it.

Edwards' Soup is prepared from specially selected beef and the finest vegetables that Irish soil can produce. It comes to you all ready for the saucepan. The cook will find Edwards' Soup a great help in the kitchen. It goes with lots of things that aren't as tasty by themselves; it strengthens her own soups and there's double the variety in the menu when Edwards' Soup is on the pantry-shelf.
