

NEGLECTED ANAEMIA

Often Leads to a Decline—Enrich the Blood by Taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

In their early teens it is quite common for girls to outgrow their strength, and mothers should carefully watch the health of their daughters at this time, for it is when strength is sapped by rapid growth that anaemia develops. The first signs may be noticed by peevishness, languor and headaches. The face grows pale, breathlessness and palpitation follow, with low spirits.

At the first symptom of anaemia mothers should act at once. Neglected anaemia often leads to decline, but if you see that your daughter's blood is enriched there need be no cause for anxiety. The finest blood enricher ever discovered is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The pure, red blood created by these pills will quickly banish all signs of anaemia. They will build up your girl's health and ensure her a robust girlhood. Give your daughter a course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills now. Make her strong like thousands of girls who have been rescued from the clutches of anaemia by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Here is a bit of proof. Miss Mary Venditti, Catamont, N.B., says:—"Three years ago while attending a convent, I studied very hard to graduate. The result was I became very nervous and got so thin and pale my teachers thought they would have to send me home. I took different kinds of medicine which my parents sent me, but my condition remained unchanged. At last one of my teachers gave me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I had hardly finished it when I could feel an improvement in my condition. I continued the use of the pills for some time longer, and I can hardly tell all the good they did me. I gained in strength and weight, and the color returned to my cheeks, and at the end of the term I graduated. I never fail to recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to my friends and acquaintances when a tonic is needed."

South Window—Upper Room.

There the sky was my top story,
With its ever-changing glory.

Winter dawn's red sun rose, past
Edge of prairie bare and vast;
Noon, the zenith radiance fell
Like a deep-toned temple bell;
Sunset and I counted hues
Multitudinous, rare, profuse.

Golden moons and silver—they
Trekled athwart the Milky Way;
Gibbons moons and crescent, too,
Crossed the illimitable blue.

Moonlit, snowlit, crystal nights,
Stippled with uncounted lights;
Or a fog, and lambent glow,
Pearls across November snow.

Spring green, summer blossoming,
Autumn pageant, winter sting,—
High adventures all of these,—
Edge of nature's mysteries.

And I waked some nights to see
A great star beam down on me!

Northern Lights.

The night had fallen and the stars had pierced the depths of a glorious sky. Then slowly above the northern horizon a flush of golden light diffused itself; the stars paled and were lost altogether in a sky that had grown vague and very far away. The light lingered a few minutes; then as quietly withdrew, but as the stars came out again to peep, it appeared moving slowly in oblique lines toward the west. Again there was a pause until with increased color and brilliancy it threw its shafts of light higher and higher. More often the rays were vertical, but sometimes oblique or in flowing spirals, never very long the same, but changing both their position and color. At one time they were golden spun with blue, then green, then flushed with rose, then like a gleaming crystal. Slowly they moved across the northern sky, pale, then glowed again and with surprising swiftness chased each other toward the zenith of the heavens.

Their wonder and beauty leads ever to the question, What are these Northern Lights, and what is the reason of their being? One may have to seek the answer through many realms of learning, yet there never fails to come that one given to the same question asked in childhood of a Canadian woodsman. He—a man who lived under the stars—surely would know, but his answer was picturesque though even then scarcely convincing. He called them the reflections of the lanterns carried by the Eskimos, walking about—in that long night darkness which envelops their polar home, and even after many years, for lack of any other explanation, whenever the aurora appears, some spot is always sought where far beyond the horizon, across the great white wastes, a little lantern swings at the side of a fur-clad form, moving now this way and now that as it searches a way through the darkness.

Color and form alone cannot portray the beauty of the Aurora. It is more than color, it is movement, it is music. Its colors are musical tones borne on high treble notes, no wight and tripping, then pausing and indefinite, then flowing through rippling arpeggios to fade almost away, then to awake through crescendo strains to the crashing beauty of grand chords, a Beethoven-like Sonata.

Retiring to a Garden.

A garden is certainly a good place to retire to, after the strenuous years. There, if anywhere, one might hope to find peace. And though Cowley did not find the Eden he anticipated, in realizing his desire for a small house and a large garden, history has many a delightful picture of men who after long experience in the affairs of the world did find a refuge among flowers. The joy of a garden is perhaps never deeper than when it comes as a late discovery, when after a strenuous career a man retires to a garden and finds unexpected delight. Having dropped some interests, how good to find there are new ones awaiting at one's door. New fields to explore, new discoveries to be made, new triumphs to be won. Just as there are compensations to a grown man reading Robinson Crusoe for the first time, having missed it in boyhood, so there are compensations for late gardeners. It is a great thing to discover for the first time the simple joys of tillage, of planting, and sowing, and tending, the joys of seed catalogues, of old clothes and gardening boots; the pleasant comradeship of birds and flowers. How beautiful a discovery to make in life's leisurely eventide and how many thousands there are who have made it. They have retired to a garden—away from crowds and controversies and worldly quests—and there have found rich and peaceful years, proving again what some of the wisest men have claimed, that gardening is perhaps the "purest of human pleasures."

Thread.

Fine and white and strong
Back and forth you weave;
It does not tangle so long
To mend a sleeve.

As gently, heart, repair
The rent of those that grieve;
Remember, none may wear
His heart upon his sleeve.

SCIENTISTS AGREE ON EVOLUTION

They Differ on Minor Points But Not Over General Theory.

Jean Baptiste Lamarck, early champion of evolution, was born in 1744 and died in 1829.

Secrets of Science.

By David Dietz.

The evolution of life from the beginning of life as a one-celled animal to its many complex forms to-day culminating in man, is regarded as an accepted fact by the whole scientific world.

All scientists unite in agreeing upon the fact of evolution. But there is not so much agreement as to just how evolution does work. The processes of evolution are not yet completely understood, although progress toward more complete understanding is being made every day.

The evolution theory is older than many people suppose. We find a sort of vague idea of evolution among the early Greeks. A definite theory of evolution was not formulated until the middle of the eighteenth century, when one was proposed by the Comte de Buffon.

But the faculty of the Sorbonne at Paris forced Buffon to recant in 1751. During the latter half of the eighteenth century, there were many advocates of evolution. These included Erasmus Darwin, the grandfather of Charles Darwin.

But as yet there was no satisfactory attempt to explain how evolution worked.

The first attempt to do this was made by Jean Baptiste Lamarck at the beginning of the nineteenth century.

The Seasons' Pageantry.

This world so fair—
How radiant in spring!
When April kisses May
And leaves a tear behind
In every daffodil—
I say within my heart,
"You are the season I love best
Of all the year,
Linger a while, dear spring!
And let me hear the rapturous thrush
Sing his first song again."
But joyously, unheeding,
She hands to merry June
Her bounteous beauty—
And is fled.

Then summer brings to earth—
A deeper loveliness,
The hum of bees is here,
And fragrant clover
Scatters her perfume to the sweet soft breeze.

When shadows lengthen on the lawn
I cry enraptured—
"Stay just a little longer, gentle summer!
Let me but pick another white June rose!"

In spite of all my pleadings—
She is gone!
Autumn is here!
The glory of the year,
Gorgeous the woods and marshes,
Clad in their crimson, gold and emerald.

They almost seem to call,
And I cry back—
"Why should this splendor vanish?
Let me but keep it—
That I may find the white and purple aster,
The deeper crimson berries,
Fill every nook and cranny with their praise!"

But in the night
So quiet and so white—
There falls the snow—
Winter creeps in.
A stillness all untouched by sight or sound—
It too will pass away—
And I can let it go,
Because a beauty which can never fade
Begins to dawn.

In the least things have faith, yet distrust in the greatest of all!
Do I find love so full in my nature . . .

Her Suffering Relieved and Health Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Toronto, Ontario.—"I am certainly very grateful for the benefit I have received from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, also the Sensitive Wash and the Liver Pills. In the early spring I was suffering so much from loss of blood that I thought I would never be any better as doctor's medicine relieved me only for the time being. I saw the Vegetable Compound advertised in the "Toronto Star," and I find the Vegetable Compound Tablets the best for me. I have been taking them since Spring, and I intend keeping them by me all the time. After reading your Private Text-Book I saw it was necessary to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sensitive Wash, and I can safely say I feel a different woman. My friends remark how well I look. I am a very busy woman, but I am ready at all times to boost your medicines."—Mrs. CHARLES GIFFIN, 645 Lansdowne Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.
