

To The Editor of The Times

IR.-My friend Dr. Hagberg Wright has been misled by a coincidence. He is quite correct as to the Conference of 1903, but the Majority (Bolsheviks) which defeated the Minority (Menshe viks) represented a definite policy. They were what we might call the "whole-hoggers" of Socialism, and for this reason were called Bolsheviks (i.e., the biggest, or those who go in for the biggest things) The Minority represented the Moderates, or "thin edge of the wedge" party, hence styled Mensheviks (i.e., the smaller or hose who go in for smaller things).

Faithfully yours, J. Y. W. MACALISTER. The Times Literary Supplement.

The benches on both sides of the House were unusually thronged during the inter Lord Bryce, and Lord Parmoor. Nine or ten prelates, including the Bishops of London, St. Asaph, and Southwark, were present. Save for the large attendance of peers and the removal of the covering from the Throne and of the rail which guards it, the House was as on any other day.

The hum of conversation subsided when the Deputy Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod." There followed robes of scarlet and ermine. Lord Balfour of Burleigh, and Lord Crewe; then the Deputy Earl Marshal (Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Edmund Talbot); next, also wearing their brilliant robes as peers, came the Lord Great Chamberlain (Lord Lincolnshire), the Lord Privy Seal (Lord Crawford), and the Lord President of the Council (Lord Curzon). Behind them, preceded by the coronet borne on a velvet cushion by the Hon, Sir Sidney Greville, and escorted by his "supporters," the Duke of Beaufort and the Duke of Somerset, entered the Prince. His Royal Highness wore over his military uniform the scarlet robe and ermined collar of a duke.
