Rippling Rhymes

Knitting Women.

I always liked to talk with girls both married and unwed, for they were quick to note the pearls of wisdom that I shed. And it told an anecdote, full of amusing chaff, there'd come from every female throat the gladdest sort of laugh. And I'd read a sonnet, fine that I had lately writ, and women liked this stunt of mine so well they'd throw a fit. But now I tell my yarns in vain, in vain recite my poems; the girls have knitting on the brain, in all our native homes. They're knitting, knitting, all the day, and when I spring my spiel, I hear some busy woman say, "This sock is mostly heel!" To entertain the knitting dames, I quote an epic rich; and interrupting one exclaims, "Gee whiz! I've dropped a stitch!" I tell of springs of ancient lore, from which I've often drunk, and says the woman by the door, "This yarn's extremely punk." The idle things of

Complete Devastation Wrought by Bolsheviki

Winter Palace Was Wrecked by Maximalists Last November—How Municipal Council of Petrograd Attempted to Assume Reins of Power

New York, Feb. 9.—The Petrograd correspondent of the Moscow newspaper Ouzo Rossii (Morn of Russia), who in the issue of November 21st described the siege and capture of the Winter Palace, by the Bolsheviki forces, and the perilous march of the arrested Kerensky ministers from the palace to the Fortresses of Peter and Paul, gives in the same paper a picture of the looted Winter Palace and of the events of the next six days, including the attempt of the Municipal Council of Petrograd to assume the reins of power in the capital and form a coalition ministry with representatives of all parties.

"I succeeded," he says, "in walking through the palace a few hours after the bombardment. The corpses of the soldiers of the Women's Battalion, killed in defence of the Palace, had already been removed, but through the iron gate could be seen the heaps of empty shells, torn ammunition belts, books and leaflets. The whole facade of the palace was riddled by shells, the white scars standing out in striking contrast to the red of the walls. The palace square consisted of strong pickets of sailors and soldiers, heavily armed and covered with cartridge belts.

"When I entered the first floor I saw a picture of complete devastation amid which moved soldiers and sailors searching the rooms and adding to the confusion. All the drawers of the sideboards and cupboards had been broken open, all the chairs smashed and the wrecked furniture thrown together in heaps. On the beds and sofas broken boxes, lamps, handkerchiefs and porcelain had been thrown. The corridors were filled with torn papers, fragments and scraps of the magnificent tapestries and broken furniture. Everywhere absolute chaos.

"In the rooms where the electric fittings had been stored the soldiers, having carried off everything that seemed to have any value, were amassing themselves and a crowd of applauding spectators by smashing the electric bulbs. In one room I saw a soldier hacking away the valuable tapestry from a couch with a table knife. On the second floor the atmosphere was even gloomier. Everywhere dirt, indecent mattresses over all the floors, soldiers squatted at their meals on the wonderful couches of the imperial furniture, spilling soup and greasy bits of meat upon the priceless tapestries.

"The palace servants were no whit behind the soldiers at the looting and went around with bags collecting what struck their fancies. In the Round Hall the soldiers had set up an enormous kettle and were cooking their soup. In the room of the Press Bureau all the papers had been torn to bits. In the Picture Gallery many pictures had been slashed to strips of painted rags. In one room heavy guns had been set up. Windows were pierced with bullets. It was a nightmare of destruction."

The 8th of November, the day following the siege, passed quietly, the street cars were running everywhere, the number of patrols had decreased and absolute order prevailed with the Federal Government in session at Ottawa. Before the adjournment, J. M. Hawthorthwaite, Socialist Labor member, sought to have a motion putting the Legislature on record as being opposed to foreign labor in any form and also as opposed to the introduction of Chinese or coolie labor into British Columbia under the indenture plan. The resolution was opposed by Government, as due notice had not been given. The representatives of the Allied Powers held long conferences, but no decision regarding recognition of the new regime was taken and it was stated that special instructions from the respective governments would be necessary, as there was now no one established government in the country. Leon Trotsky had visited the Foreign Office, announced himself as the Foreign Minister of the new government and asked for the "Secret Treaties of the Allies." He was told, to his amazement, that documents relating to arrangements made during the war were not available in Petrograd.

In view of the overthrow of the Provisional Government and the dissolution of the temporary Council of the Russian Republic, the Municipal Council became a centre of political life. By noon the lobbies of the Municipal Council building were filled with representatives of all democratic organizations, united to protest against the seizure of power by the Bolsheviki leaders. Demands were made for guarantees for the safety and if possible the release of the members of the Women's Battalion. The extraordinary session of the Municipal Council was most stormy, owing to a proposal to expel the Bolsheviki members of the Council. Great excitement was caused by reports of the arrest of five members of the Council, sent as emissaries to the army in an attempt to prevent bloodshed, and by street fighting started near the building of the Council. A Bolsheviki woman representative tried to explain the irritation of the soldiers and sailors against the Council, which had become the centre of the struggle against the Bolsheviki authority. A tremendous uproar began when reports came in that a little girl had been killed and women injured in the fighting, with shouts of "Out of the Cadet A. I. Shringaroff (since killed in the January troubles) arose and demanded the immediate release of all the arrested ministers and declared that the chiefs of the Bolsheviki are responsible for this fratricidal war.

"Out of here," cried Shringaroff to the Bolsheviki representatives in the Council, "you are murderers and traitors to the country." Representatives of the public joined in the tumult with shouts of "Out of here, looters, murderers!"

With great difficulty a riot was avoided, the Council finally adopting a resolution demanding the release of the ministers.

The following day was also a day of complete uncertainty. The telephone system was still working, thanks to the self-sacrificing work of the telephone girls, some of whom had been on duty 24 hours without relief in spite of the bombardment of the exchange building, but communications were very poor, giving an opening for the most sensational rumors to circulate among the population. Kerensky with an army was reported approaching the Warsaw railway station and about to bombard that building with heavy guns. Another set of rumors had the destroyers in the river at the point of opening fire across the city against the Kerensky forces. Municipal hospitals were reported full of wounded from street combats. Such rumors drove the population from the streets, which were entirely deserted. Emissaries of the Council were sent to the powder mills to prevent expected disorders in that part of the town, which would have caused a colossal disaster.

Amid these conditions of anxiety and uncertainty leaders of the anti-Bolsheviki parties were indulging in discussions as to the possibility of organizing a coalition government without participation of the Bolsheviki representatives, the Cadet leader Shingaroff fighting with tremendous audacity for the isolation and exclusion of the Bolsheviki from political life.

By the morning of the twelfth it had become apparent that the sensational rumors of fighting were without foundation, civilians again appeared in the streets, stores in the Nevsky reopened for business and the street cars were again crowded. Normal life in the city had, however, suffered a most severe blow from the entire suspension of the telephone service, the manager and entire personnel walking out upon the refusal of the Bolsheviki leaders to remove the guards from the central station.

E. C. LEGISLATURE

By Courier Leased Wire

Victoria, B.C., Feb. 12.—The Legislature yesterday, after having been in session for one hour, adjourned until February 26, an interval to allow Premier Brewster to attend the meeting of Provincial Premiers which the Federal Government is holding at Ottawa. Before the adjournment, J. M. Hawthorthwaite, Socialist Labor member, sought to have a motion putting the Legislature on record as being opposed to foreign labor in any form and also as opposed to the introduction of Chinese or coolie labor into British Columbia under the indenture plan.
