"Indeed! A voice like that in white child is worthy of cultivation Does she sing other songs with equa pathos?"

"I must confess, Auntie," replies Edith, "that her music is mostly confined to Negro melodies, which she has learned from Hannah; but she ings them all with great fervor Really, Auntie, I hardly know what to do with Milly. I have hoped your coming might help me out of the 'quandary. Since Mamma's death, she has been under no contro at all. Papa thinks whatever she does is just right, and so, of course, permits her to follow her own to clinations." Here the convers tien was interrupted by the entrance of Milly herself. She did not look like a "tom-boy," for she was a sweet faced, demure little maiden. " Milly," said her sister, " Aunt Hayward thought you were a little pretty face, and the red lips parted. revealing two rows of pearly teetb She held out two little sunburned paws, saving : "Not quite so bar as that Auntie, though I am tanned most black enough, Elith says, and my head is 'most wooly enough." Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman right hon. leader of this Government is true there are a few people coing into the North-West at last; she must have the little Western she had the satisfaction of seeing so says it is true there are a few people she must have the little Western flower to brighten her city home. Wide a belt of burnt land between her home and the great fire that sha felt sure they were safe, and she started to seek a refuge from the blinding smoke in the house her efforts had saved; but, borne on the wind, far up in mid-air, came sailing a blazing mass of straw, and, to pick berries, when there arose one of those terrible storms so common in some parts of the West; lightning and rain, accompanied by a furious wind. While the family were in wide a belt of burnt land between says it is true there are a few people going into the North-West at last; but where are they coming from? They are coming from Ontario. Well, Sir, let me tell the hon. gentleman there is no class of the population of Canada, nor of the world, that it is so important should go into his tide of immigration that is the great North-West as the people of Ontario; and why, Sir? Because hey have that experience in the very work which remains to be done limbed out on the roof, and with wind. While the family were in dimbed out on the roof, and with great distress over Milly's absence, her broom shoved the flaming straw in the North-West, which is of the that they are going to suffer a public the most invaluable character,—they she came galloping home on a pet to the ground, where it was quenchcaw. When questioned, she answered:

My hon, friead the storm came on, and I knew the cows were all going down to the Fork, to drink, and their path leads right through the berry-path. So I waited a minute or two, till they came fling along, and then jumped right on Brindle's back. I knew by the clouds that we were going to have a bow; and I thought she was borned literally off, as was nearly so big the wind couldn't carry her off, and I meant to bug her tight the storm came on, and I knew the She caught a pail and dashed the better his circumstances and make so big the wind couldn't carry ner off, and I meant to bug her tight and lie low, so I wouldn't blow away. person knows that the great difficulty is in getting immigration into a new country, is to get it started. Every one knows that the enormous advantages that the Western States of America had was that while we were employing land agants in Europe to circulate information with reference to the advantage of couning to our country, they had sure and more successful agents at work in the people who, having gone into the Western States, had prospered and wrote to their friends and seathern means to come out and share the prosperity of the prairie. The great difficulty with us was to get this initial settlement; to have a few hundred thousand people poured into the North-West, in order that they might exercise an influence in promoting an immigration much greater than could be exercised by any agency. In 1880, how many do you suppose went into Manitoba in January of the present year oent, at that most unfavorable period of the year. How many do hongentlemen suppose went into Manitoba in January of the present year — 2,877. In February, 1881, 240; in February, 1882, 3,189; in March 1882, 7,300; and what do hon, gentlemen suppose is the number of persors that, in the first ten pays of April that have elapsed, the latest information that we have, went into Manitoba? No less than 6,000 people. So that in these of the great units of the pays of April that have elapsed, the latest information that we have, went into Manitoba? No less than 6,000 people. So that in these of the great units and the ten days additional, is it not mailfest that, under these circumstances, the hon member for North Norfolk and his hon leader should
