> THE HERMIT. BY FREDERIC J. HALM. (written for the Catholic Mirror.)

Far from the world's busy mart, In silence here I dwell I dwell apart, Where from the dawn till close of day I calmly meditate and pray. No sound of Nature here is heard Not e'en the maten hymn of bird-A solemn stillness ever broods O'er these death-like solitudes :-Yet hath it, voiceless told me more Than I had ever known before. Everywhere my steps have trod, I heard men's tongues blaspheming God But here, I find no trace of sin Save when I turn my gaze within Am I content? I'll say e'en more, I ne'er knew happiness before— For here I only live that I May reach my home beyond the sky. Happy they who dwell apart With naught of envy in their heart,-Who dwell in silent solitudes Unvisited by cares or feuds ; Where sky and sand proclaims naugh Than everything and nothingness-Where man not here and there they see But everwhere the Diety
