Last Monday evening the Epworth League of the Methodist Church enjoyed very much the splendid program prepared by the Missionary Department. The topic given by Miss Cora O'Brien was most interesting. Her subject being "Ambassadors to Korea," which told of the life of one man, Sygman Rhee, a highly educated native of that country, who scoffed at the religion of our missionaries, but later was put in prison with others of his countrymen for printing certain editorials in the daily papers, and there he suffered untold agony in a terrible cell. But as time went on he began to think of what would become of him if he were to be executed and die like many others. This was the turning point in his life and seeking for help he prayed, "Oh God! Save my country and then save my soul!" From that time he never ceased in his endeavors to tell others of the Great and True God, and through his efforts many were brought from darkness into light. Several Missionary jokes or rather the mistakes that missionaries make in the languages were then read by a number of the Leaguers. One of them—a lady missionary in Brazil requested her servant to bring her some little article that she needed at once. The servant steadfastly refused to obey her orders, with great indignation she went to her husband to lay complaint, only to learn that she had asked the man to kiss her. The meeting was closed with a song led by Mr. Howey.
