Referring to the "lucky nature of my wound," Major Ashplant says: "Gee, out 'twas a near thing for me; another half-inch and I'd be pushing daisies. I've got the pieces of shrapnel, a very nice souvenir from "Fritz," and an ugly piece it is, from one of his deadly highexplosive 5.9 shells, one of the best shells made. I had only come up from what recently was a German dugout, now our advance battle battalion head-quarters, to get a breath of fresh air and a rest. Our artillery and that of the enemy were pounding away at each other with all calibre guns, but about ten shells of ours to his one. . . I just laid down on the side of the smashed-up trench in my "tin hat." Two or three of my runners (message carriers) were stretched out resting around, when 'plug,' I felt as though half my head had gone.
