Last week the Monitor-Sentinel in editorial said: "Something is radically wrong when people in the heart of a farming community find butter and eggs a scarce and high commodity", etc. Being a farmer, I don't like the sound of that. It sounds of fault-finding. First bear in mind the myriads of grasshoppers that ate all the green feed and many cows have had to be content with chewing the cud most of the time. The long continued drought shortened all crops and many have had to diminish their herd—hence the scarcity of butter. As to eggs I don't feel like being blamed that they are scarce either—Last spring realizing that eggs were altogether too high and with a desire to increase the world's supply mother set a hen and out of thirteen eggs came forth two discolorate looking chickens. "Thinking I was not worth bothering with we gave them to a neighbor. We were advised that we did not "set" on the right time of the moon. So after carefully studying the calendar, hen No 2 was set. Mother advised me to have some corn meal on hand for the young chicks when they should come forth. In good time a 100lb. sack of this necessity was secured and when the three weeks was up the old hen bustled up and revealed one solitary chicken. With a heart of pity we concluded to raise it. After four weeks careful nursing, it died. Being satisfied that we had done our duty, we gave up the business for this year.

"There can be no doubt that netting has a most demoralizing effect, and I think the more restrictions that hedge it around the better for the community."
This was the statement of Mr. Stuart Strathy, General Manager of the Traders Bank. "I have not considered particularly what means should be taken to restrict betting," he continued, "or how far legislation should go in that direction. The liberty of the subject must not, of course, be unduly interfered with, but to my mind betting is a very poor way of endeavoring to make money, and should be discouraged in every possible way. Man was intended to earn his living by the sweat of his brow, and not by gambling. We should endeavor to set higher ideals before the people, and educate them up to these."
Asked whether the pernicious effects of betting had been brought under his observation in connection with banking, Mr. Strathy replied that so far as the Traders Bank was concerned, he was happy to say there had never been any trouble on that account within his knowledge. "Our employees know," he said, "that betting would not be tolerated for a moment, and I have no reason to believe that it is practised by any."

A SELF-MADE MAN
Perhaps no better example of the self-made man than Mr. Rhodes could be found in the province. From the position of an orphan boy deprived in large measure of educational advantages, and compelled at the early age of thirteen or fourteen to begin the battle of life, to that of a proprietor of one of the largest industries in his native land, is a degree of advancement that was not gained without long, patient and earnest effort, backed by ability.
