

of living out of all proportion to wages, there must be some mistake about war of any kind, civil or international, being a "blessing."

We repeat, huge fortunes were made here and there by the few—the speculators, the contractors, and the adventurers; but to the masses it only meant a burden of debt and taxation, the influence of which is still felt, even at this distance of time upon every avenue of trade and industry. The Crimean war and the later Franco-German war did not come so near home to us, but the effects which they finally worked out touching our material interests were much the same in kind, if not in degree, as those of which our four years' civil strife were productive. It is well for civilization, humanity and the progress of the race that it should be so. If war were indeed a means of putting money in the purse of either of those that engage in it, or those who are simply spectators of it, how long would it be ere the earth would be a universal bear garden, and hopelessly abandoned to barbarism and cruelty? It is an immutable law of nature that no man shall benefit by the calamities of another man; and the law is as applicable to nations and communities as to individuals. The highest interests of civilization and progress, moral and material, are all identified with the maintenance of peace and goodwill among the nations. And any policy, or any philosophy, or any economic theory, or commercial expectation, which proceeds upon the contrary assumption, depend upon it, it is a mischievous fallacy.—Chicago Journal of Commerce.
