

De Robis Robilibus.

WE came across a circular sent out to subscribers to the JOURNAL in '81 which ends up with the following interrogation, quite worthy of Hibernian authorship: "If we do not hear from you, may we retain your name on our subscribers' list?"

We have not yet had the speech from the throne in the mock parliament, but we have had a couple of vigorous speeches from the overthrown.

Anxious student (who expects a letter at the P.O. and gets only a paper) to P.M.G.—"Is this all, for me?" P.M.G.—"Yes, it's all for you."

Professor in Latin class (after explaining about rigging of ancient ships) asks: "Is there a mariner in this class?"

Student (who has made two trips, washing dishes, on steamer "Corsican") holds up his hand.

Prof.—"Well, Mr. —, can a ship sail against the wind?"

Student mariner (?)—"Why, no sir, under no conditions; certainly not!"

D. L. Gordon, although in Divinity, is taking his bitters (Porter) again.

Student (presumably Irish) speaks thus of his misfortune in exams: "If I had written less on each question, and more on the whole, I would have been all right."

Prof. in Latin class, describing ancient manuscripts: "I have several photographs which it is quite impossible for me to show the class."

Commotion among the ladies.

Freshman in Jenkins' store—"Do you keep gowns here?"

Old man, in a hoarse whisper—"Night or day gowns?"

W. A. Grange at A.M.S.—"I have much pleasure in seconding the motion, because in this way we will not only be enabled to get at the athletic side of the ladies, but it may assist the court."

D. M. Solahdt, after football match—"I don't know whether those scrimmage men seek for a sign or not, but they certainly belong to a stiff-necked generation."

A. R-n-n-e (lover of street music)—"When I get married I think I'll buy a street piano."

J. S. Watson—"I suppose to drown down the other sounds."
