

- Canadian import policy in general should be based on a recognition of its costs to consumers and the costs of delaying adjustment. Canada should minimize any new protection, reduce protection gradually as part of bilateral or multilateral negotiations, and accelerate adjustment processes.
- Export promotion should be pursued aggressively and with greater reliance on private sector mechanisms, but the degree of subsidization this may involve should be within internationally accepted rules and practices.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

International trade is the life-blood of the Canadian economy. It is a major contributor to Canadian growth, jobs and real incomes. In view of the changing nature and patterns of international trade, Canadians are now confronted with several options in formulating trade policy. This Commission has identified three major approaches, each of which has several variations. Canada might:

- Maintain its present policy. It might keep to the level and type of protection currently in place, but make selective efforts both to improve access abroad and to protect Canadian industry on a limited case-by-case basis.
- Participate actively in a new round of multilateral trade negotiations under the auspices of the GATT, in order to improve and secure our country's access to foreign markets, to open up our own market, and to strengthen the legal framework for international trade.
- In addition to taking the initiative for the elimination of trade barriers at the multilateral level, open negotiations with the Government of the United States to reach an agreement on a substantial reduction of barriers, tariff and non-tariff, between Canada and the United States.

This Commission rejects any generalized move toward greater protection or toward import substitution as a general policy to insulate Canadian producers from the international economy. This approach, while perhaps the most comfortable in the short term, would lead, in the longer term, to major inefficiencies in the national economy, a loss of jobs and lower incomes, and would contribute to an erosion of the multilateral system. In our view, a policy of maintaining the status quo would carry the serious risk of taking Canada backwards to a more protectionist position.

Commissioners recommend that multilateral trade negotiations under the GATT remain a central theme of Canadian trade policy; thus Canada should move
