

BIOGRAPHIES

James M. Lindsay

James M. Lindsay is a Senior Fellow in the Foreign Studies Program at the Brookings Institution, where his main research interests are national missile defense and the domestic politics of foreign policy. He is currently writing a book that examines how demographic, economic, and technological changes are likely to affect the evolution of American foreign policy over the next quarter century.

Before joining Brookings, Dr. Lindsay was a Professor of Political Science at the University of Iowa, where he was an award-winning instructor. In 1996-1997, he was Director for Global Issues and Multilateral Affairs on the staff of the National Security Council. His responsibilities there included UN reform, State Department reorganization, and funding for international affairs. He has also served as a consultant to the United States Commission on National Security/21st Century (Hart-Rudman Commission).

Dr. Lindsay has authored, co-authored, or edited ten books and more than forty journal articles and book chapters on various aspects of American foreign policy and international relations. His books include Defending America: The Case for Limited National Missile Defense (with Michael E. O'Hanlon), Congress and the Politics of U.S. Foreign Policy, and Congress and Nuclear Weapons. He has also contributed articles to the op-ed pages of several major newspapers, including the New York Times and the Los Angeles Times.

Dr. Lindsay holds an A.B. in Economics and Political Science (highest distinction, highest honors) from the University of Michigan and an M.A. M.Phil., and Ph.D. from Yale University.

Michael Dawson

Michael Dawson is the Deputy Director (Political) of the United States Relations Division of DFAIT.

Dr. Dawson received his M.A. and Ph.D. in European History from the University of Toronto. After joining the Foreign Service in 1977, he served from 1978 to 1981 in New Delhi as a junior political and consular officer. On reassignment to Ottawa, he worked on international aviation negotiations and maritime transportation issues. Posted to Moscow as First Secretary (1985-88), he focused on East-West relations, Soviet foreign and strategic policies, and arms control issues, which continued after returning to Ottawa (1988 to 1990) to the Policy Planning Division. In 1990, he served as Deputy Director for NATO policy until posted to Washington from 1991 to 1996, as Counsellor responsible for political-military affairs, including US strategic and nuclear policies, arms control and proliferation issues, and bilateral defence relations, including NORAD and the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. In 1996, he returned to Ottawa as Deputy Director (Political) for UK and Ireland in the Northern Europe Division of DFAIT. He was appointed to his current position in 2000.
