

He was eager to rejoin his own poor family at Inverness.

Many other instances might be here produced of the countenance and kindness shewn to Macleod by his own honourable kindred, and of letters from them to him, or concerning him, in proof of his veracity. But we avoid the expence which the publication of these would occasion. It has been alledged, by some who have seen Macleod, that it is impossible so hale and so hearty a man can be turned of 100. Let such wiseacres reflect, that the same vigour of constitution that prolongs life, prolongs the appearance of health and strength. They would have made the same observation on old Parr and Jenkins at the same period of their lives, though the former lived to the age of 150, and the latter to that of 160.

F I N I S