Of the books dealing with the Criminal Code published since its promulgation in 1892, it has been a matter of general complaint that sections of difficulty have been ignored by being passed without a single comment, and that scarcely any attention has been paid to the subjects of Criminal Evidence and Practice in the Criminal Courts. Hundreds of points of practice are not dealt with by the Code at all, and the general law of Criminal Evidence remains but little affected by it. The object of the present work is to place within a single volume the material required by the lawyer in Court, and to make it a first-class Practice Book. The Code is fully annotated, and the procedure from start to finish in a criminal prosecution thoroughly explained. Special features are hints for the defence which appear throughout the work, showing how and when the accused may successfully take objections in matters of procedure or of evidence. The subjects of Indictable Offences, Summary Trials, Summary Convictions, Pardoning Power, Tickets-of-Leave, Extradition, Certiorari, Habeas Corpus, and of Provincial Criminal and Quasi-Criminal Laws receive due attention. The Forms for all proceedings are very complete.

This book is not padded by historical comments but contains only the present law.
