Balfour's Startling Message

One of the most hopeful signs in Canada to-day is the interest the young men are beginning to take in the politics of the country. They are in public spirit made in recent years not yet sufficiently aroused. One reason why is that the older men refuse thruout the United States, it will be to let them forward, and it is for this reason that we publish to-day in even more striking in its future scope prominent type the views of the Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour in regard to the and character. Movements of that age of men in public service. He says petrification is the crying disease kind are usually hard to initiate and —the most insidious of all diseases, as he says. But read it first:

You may say I am not yet 64, and that I ought to have, if health spared me, many years of active life before me. About that no man can say.

Let me make a single observation. I desire to leave the position of heavy responsibility which I hold before I can be suspected of suffering from the most insidious of all diseases—that disease which comes upon those who, without losing their health or their intellect, nevertheless get somewhat petrified in the old courses which they have pursued; whose authority grows because they have been long in the public service, or have been great men of science, or business, or whatever it may be, but who cannot deal with great problems, which, in this changing world, are perpetually arising, with all the freshness and elasticity really desirable in those who have the conduct of great concerns.

No man ever knows in himself when that moment has come. A man knows he is ill. A man may even know when his memory begins to fall, or some other obvious sign of decay is pressed on his vision. But the sort of malady of which I am speaking may attack people in the prime of life, in the prime of intellectual vigor, as long as that intellectual vigor is exercised on the old lines. But, nevertheless, altho they may retain apparently all the powers, both of brain and limb, which they had in the prime of life, they are less capable of adapting themselves to the changing circumstances of life than those who are of less authority, because younger, and yet more capable, also because younger. I am vain enough to hope that I have not reached that yet but I should be miserable if I ran the margin too fine, and nothing, I think, would be more terrible than to realize that while people were looking to you more than ever, owing to your lengthening experience or leadership, you have not got the keenness or alertness which must go with increasing years adequately to meet the demands made on it.
