BILLY SOUTHWORTH IS REAL

NATIONAL BATTING CHAMPION Record keepers and dope slingers generally were not willing to give Outfielder Billy Southworth of the Pittsburg Pirates credit for the honor of being the National League's best batter last year. They said he was only a flash anyway, and the he took part in more than half the games the Pirates played they held he wasn't a regular member and Zack Wheat, hitting six points less, was proclaimed the season's champion with the stick. When Southworth started weakly this year the record keepers said it proved their argument. But Southworth was sick in the spring and could not show his real worth. About a month, ago he really got started and now he's on his way to prove his right to honors as a batsman. He's hitting among the "regulars" now and there's not a batter above him with real license to be shere. He'll be on top again and on question about it if he keeps up his good work, and he's been in long enough to prove he is a consistent performer. Southworth joined the Pirates in July of last year, after finishing the curtailed Southern League season. It was not his first appearance in the big show. He had been with Cleveland in 1914 and in the changes made on that team the following year was let out to Portland. The Pittsburg club brought him back to major circles after his good work in Portland in 1916 and sent him to Birmingham "for development." He showed he could hit in any league by swatting southern pitching just as he had swatted coast league pitching. He's a natural hitter and entitled to the credit for it—and he's out to prove it.

What's the Matter

"What's the matter with the Red Sox?" seems to be a common query these days, and within the last week I have received letters containing all sorts of suggestions and recommedations for the uplift of the world champions, writes Bob Dunbar in the Boston Herald. Some of the voluntary managers ascribe the difficulties of the team to the sale or trading of stars. Others say that the champions have discarded their great standby of other years, the famous "one run game" which Bill Carrigan made famous.

Yet in no case has there been a

made famous.

Yet in no case has there been a trace of great bitterness because the team is not up near the top, and no one gets ironical because the team, which three times in the last four years has won the world championship, is five games below the .500 mark at present. Everywhere along the line they seem to be showing a lot of patience. And what they think about breaking up the present team indicates that they are dubious of the merit of any big dicker which can be made at this stage of the game.

The game had scarcely begun when Adams and Allen collided, the latter hurbing his foot. Play was speedily resumed, the ball traveling rapidly to Davenports goal, Art Robinson clearing. Kershaw centred nicely to Lavery, who was public tup for offside. From the resulting klost Reid got possession and placing to the centre, but in clearing Cairns standded in the eighteen yards area and a penalty was awarded. The kick was entrusted to E. Fidler, but McCracken saved finely only to be beaten by Fideler from the rebound. A thunderstorm has broken over the ground, forcing the crow dto seek shelter. Dunlops right half is proving a monument to his side. Ernie Fidler almost got thru, as after beating three opponents he was robbed by Richardson when shooting.
