PRODUCTION OF IRON AND STEEL

An Increase in Canada During February, But Outlook Not Bright.

Despite the fact that one more furnace was blown out during February, leaving only six blast furnaces operating in Canada at the close of the month the production of pig iron was higher by over six thousands tons than the total production for the previous month. The actual figures for February show a total of 57,711 long tons of pig iron produced, exclusive of spiegel-iron and ferro-alloys. By far the greater part of the output was made by firms for their own use, the amount credited to this account being 47,575 long tons of basic pig iron made in blast furnaces and 199 tons of foundry iron made in electric furnaces. In addition to the 199 tons just mentioned, 5,947 long tons of foundry iron was made in blast furnaces making a total of foundry iron for the month of 6,046 tons. The 5,947 tons of foundry iron and 4,900 tons of malleable iron from blast furnaces were produced for sale. The output of ferro-alloys including spiegel-iron and ferro-alloy decreased from 5,284 tons in January to 2,094 tons in February. Compared with the January production of pig iron for the use of firms exporting, February was over 19,000 tons higher, while the production for sale dropped almost 5,000 tons. Blast furnaces were operated during the month at Sault Ste. Marie, Hamilton and Port Colborne in Ontario, and at Sydney, Cape Breton. The furnace of the Midland Iron and Steel Company at Midland, Ontario, was blown out before the end of the month as was also one of the furnaces operated by the Steel Company of Canada. On the other hand, one additional furnace operated by the Algoma Steel Corporation was blown in during February. The pig iron production during the month of February in the United States was the lowest for any February during the last five years and the month's production was lower than that for any month since October, 1919, at the time of the steel strike. The average production of pig iron in the United States in February according to "Iron Age" amounted to 69,187 long tons a day, as compared with an average of 77,945 long tons per day during the month of February. As might be expected from the increased output of pig iron, the production of steel ingots and castings during February also showed an increase over the January output, the production of ingots and castings in February reaching a total of 85,447 long tons, as compared with 80,058 tons in January. While this is considerably below the average for 1920, it is in excess of the December figure. As in January also, the bulk of the production was made for use in further processes of manufacture by the firms producing, the total quantity of steel ingots made for this purpose being 56,228 long tons. Of this quantity 56,157 long tons was made in basic open hearth furnaces, 83 tons in electric furnaces, and the remainder in Bessemer converters. Only 144 tons of steel ingots was reported during the month as made for sale, all of this, with the exception of 15 tons, being made in electric furnaces. The total output of direct steel castings decreased from 3,127 tons in January to 2,145 tons in February, the principal loss being in the amount of basic open hearth castings made. The complete stagnation of the iron and steel markets of the world finds its parallel in Canada and at present there is little hope of any immediate change for the better. Commodity prices are falling; costs of operation are being cut in almost every industry, and while steel prices have already begun to reflect cost-cutting operations, the outlook for increase in the steel-working and construction industries has not yet set in.
