The six boys charged with being disorderly in Richmond street were severely lectured for not spending the day as it was intended to be spent in a Christian community. He said that in the old days people respected Sunday far more than they do now. They attended church more relarly, and made their surroundings brighter on Sundays than on ordinary days. Now, he said, all that appeared to have been done away with, and Sunday was like any other day, and the children were not taught to respect it. He said that the parents were responsible for the actions of their children. He told the boys they were liable to a fine of 88 or two months in jail. They were sent below, and afterwards allowed to go with a warning.

Briefly, these are the chief arguments in favor of a recognition by the government of the rights of the people of St. John in the demands which they now make in connection with the winter mail and freight business of Canada. We have no quarrel with Halifax. We do not wish to deprive her people of any business that they have a right to. Halifax, like St. John, is on the map to stay, and both ports have to be recognized.
