PLAYS AND PLAYERS

Budget of News Concerning Stage Favorites Known to St. John Audiences.

When, a short time ago, several of the theatres in the maritime provinces became affiliated with the Aaron agency in New York, it was thought that the advantages of the union would be soon apparent and this is now being borne out, and will so continue. The theatres formerly booked on the Julian Cahn circuit in New England, commencing at Bangor, have now been secured, and it is thus that Manager Anderson of the Opera House hopes to secure from Boston and New York all most direct a better class of productions which, after playing in St. John, Halifax, and other cities, will then go on the former Cahn circuit and take time through New England. In a nicely arranged booklet of Reviews and Views, which has recently come to this office, the praises of Miss Christie MacDonald are sounded to the highest degree for her portrayal of the princess in "The Spring Maid," at the Liberty Theatre, New York. She is lauded for her clever work, for her beauty, and for her lending to the performance such a captivating air. The booklet contains several criticisms of her work clipped from the New York papers. The Evening Sun's dramatic editor writes, as follows: "It is a long, long time since any American singer has made such a completely successful stellar debut. She is captivating. While there is no desire to be selfish or to shatter national hopes or aspirations, it might be well to inform the critic that Miss MacDonald has always been known in the maritime provinces as a Pictou, N.S., girl. Contracts have been signed for the presentation of the world-famous musical success, Madame Sherry, in St. John, and this great production will be heard here in June. The company to play it were in Toronto a few weeks ago, and their receipts were $14,000 for the week. Madame Schumann-Heink, who sang before hundreds here some months ago, has thus early begun to make preparations for the disposition of her property at her death, or at least she informed Cincinnati newspapermen that she has. Her purpose she says, is to provide a home for aged stage people, an institution not unlike the Edwin Forrest Home in Philadelphia. The Rosary May be Seen Here. Manager Anderson of the Opera House, is negotiating for the presentation of "The Rosary," in the local house, and contracts will probably be signed this week. Four road companies are now playing this great success. Anna Eva Fay, who has been in this city several times, but not for a few years, is this week holding forth in Ottawa, where she is giving spiritualistic seances. Florence Reed, who has just closed a estate and her theatrical ventures during these years. She alleges that her Miss Irwin money to buy real estate and to make seven productions, the proceeds of which she did not share with him. Miss Irwin makes a general denial and asks for a bill of particulars. Camille D'Arcy, who will be remembered here for her work in the Daley Stock and later with the Shady Young aggregation, is playing with distinction in Chicago. Miss Nelson, who will be recalled through the same channels, is also in the company, and is receiving much praise with Miss D'Arcy for her work. Edward Sheldon, the author of the Boas, which is now running at the Astor Theatre, New York, with Holbrook Blinn in the star role of Michael Regan, is a Chicagoan. He attended school in that city, and later went to Harvard, where he passed with high honors. Sheldon was a member of Prof. George Pierce Baker's class in dramatic literature and construction, and the first result of this incentive to dramatic work was a play entitled "A Family Affair," which is still unproduced. While present of the Harvard Dramatic Club, which he organized, he took up the work of playwriting seriously, and "Salvation Nell" was completed and produced by Mrs. Fiske while he was still at the university. His next play was "The Nigger," the first dramatic success achieved by the New Theatre, and probably the most discussed play produced by that organization. The Boas, Mr. Sheldon's latest play, is said to have all the boldness and virility of its predecessor. Mr. Sheldon is probably the youngest of the successful playwrights. He is under twenty-five years of age. St. John Favorites. Florence Gear, who appeared with distinction in "Marrying Mary" a few years ago here, is now loading a company owned by Corse Patten, and while in Hobken last week she received a great ovation for her excellent work. A Boston exchange says of a local favorite playing in "The Easiest Way," Joseph Kligour was again prominent in the brutal role of Brockton, and he missed no chance to make the most of lines and situations. The play was barred in the Hill and is now in New York. Thomas E. Shea has closed his longest engagement in Boston, his last week being divided between "The Bells," and "De Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," which were conceded to be his best pieces. A new play by Margaret Mayo, author of Polly of the Circus and Baby Mine, will be produced in Rochester on Friday. Her latest work is called Behind the Scenes, and deals with stage life. Mrs. Gaudin, the famous prima donna, who will sing in Toronto this week, says the compliment that pleased her most for her work on the stage was unconsciously given by her sister, who witnessed the first performance of "Sappho," in this country. "Why, Mary, it didn't seem at all like you; it seemed like another woman on the stage," said the sister, Miss Gaudin commenting upon this casual remark said: "That's what I have always tried to do, to be a different woman on the stage than off. My private life is my own, although many versions of it have found their way into print. My work on the stage belongs to the public and the public has a right to say what it pleases and think what it pleases in regard to my work as an actress and an artist. I am myself until I reach my dressing-room, but the moment I enter it and throw off my wraps I am the character of the play. I am not myself in this only of her and try to think and act as she would. The same is true of Marguerite in Faust or of Sappho or of the other roles. They are all different women, and none of them are like myself."

R. E. Graham, who played the part of the Marston ambassador in The Merry Widow when it was presented in this city, her sick recently when the company was playing in San Francisco, Cal., and during a performance fell in a fit upon the stage. Eugene Arnold, the stage manager, and his understudy, took Graham's part and played it well. The company, with Mabel Wilbur and Charles Meakin, who made big hits here, are drawing large houses. Unless there is a change for the worse Enrico Caruso will sing in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, next week. His throat has improved a great deal in condition in the last few days and he has dared to use it, singing vocal exercises in

One Million Men Baldheaded at 35

It is estimated that in Canada and the United States, one million men are bald at 35 years of age. This is not caused by early baldness, or by an excess of grey matter in the brain as many bald-headed men like to believe. Baldness is caused by dandruff germs which dig down deep into the roots of the hair, destroying its vitality and cause it to fall out. If your hair is beginning to get thin on top, you want Parisian Sage, the dandruff cure and hair grower that is now having a most phenomenal sale all over Canada. Parisian Sage is a pleasant, refreshing tonic that penetrates into the roots of hair, kills the dandruff germs and gives moderation to "limber up," the chorus, which have been inactive so long. Clara McDowall, who has for many years been a favorite on the stage, has left the boards and gone into ranching in Wyoming. Douglas Fairbanks, the popular young star of The Cub, is to try out a new comedy called "A Gentleman of Leisure," by Woodhouse and Stapleton. If the play shows elements of success it will replace The Cub. No list has been given as to the character of Mr. Fairbanks' role, but it may be assumed that he will be given a juggle part, in which he can display his breezy personality and wear some strikingly unique style of clothes. The introduction of pet buttons on his dress suit, has been in failing health for some time. He has spent the greater part of the winter in Keene, he recently he returned to his farm in New Hampshire. John Glendinning who played here a few years ago, is now appearing in the southern states, playing in "Gordon's Wife." The company is a strong one and has been well received in cities in Virginia and elsewhere.
