"IT HARDLY SEEMS ENOUGH"
Last night was one of merciless slaughter in Puddington's Field. The pill-poppers of the National Drug Company met in deadly spherical combat with the baseball artists of the Red Rose Tea Company, but unfortunately for the aspirants of the No. 1 Druggery concern, they found that they could not pound the ball as easily as they ran the pill, and were compelled to be the recipients rather than the administrators of a concoction of medicine. They suffered ignominious defeat. The unofficial tally is alleged to have been 24 to 8. The feature of the event was the phenomenal hitting and fielding of T. Daley for the winners, but the able manner in which Smith, Butler, and Smith performed as battery for them was also commendable, while McGill, Pratt and Dingfield put up a hard prescription from the compounding shop of the losers.
