BAHAMAS EAGER FOR UNION WITH CANADA

To the Editor of the Montreal Witness:
Sir,—I am writing to you, but after reading a very important article from the Witness, which appeared in our esteemed Tribune, I thought that I would give you a few more points on the Bahamas. To describe the Bahamas as it really is a far from correct view. It is really a paradise dream. It is an old saying, “See Naples and die,” but not so now. See Nassau and the Bahamas Islands, then die. I know Mr. S. H. Mortimer and Inagua. What he told of you represents a sad case of sunshine. Mr. Mortimer has been telling you something about Inagua, so I think it is my duty to tell you something about Eleuthera. Eleuthera was once the backbone of the Bahamas, but it is not so now; it has been deserted. Eleuthera is a fruit and vegetable island. The high tariff of the United States has caused our fruit systems to collapse. My fellow planters and self are left in mighty low water. Our chief hobby is raising pineapples—most delicious fruit, known as the scarlet pine. Our people have been pinapples mad in the past. We used to do fairly well until the Americans raised their tariff on us, and that put us practically on our backs. Union with Canada means a great thing to us planters. Eleuthera can never be what she has been, so many of our people have gone to the State of Florida, and even a few have taken refuge in Canada. But if we should ever have union with Canada, I am of the opinion that all our people will return. We are something like the Japanese on this point—we all love our home. Our pineapple season has just ended. It begins in May and ends in August. Our next article which we are going to cultivate is sugar. We don't use machines; we do it hand cleaned. But at Nassau, the capital, they use machines. I cannot close without mentioning the fact, Union with Canada is a part of our daily prayers. I often wonder, whether we have the good will of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, our prime minister, and I wonder how he takes the suggestion. I sincerely hope it is in the affirmative. I believe that God is with us, and the only thing left for us to do is wrestle, fight and win. We are setting out this month of August, tomato plants for the Canada-Bahama Fruit and Development Co., Ltd., of which Mr. Harold Scudal is manager. Large inducements down here for men in the fruit business. Say a good word for us, sir.

WM. T. CINCINGO,
Bahamas, Aug. 19, 1911.

(Montreal Witness, editorial.)

The letter from Mr. (Cincingo), a pineapple and sugar planter on the island of Eleuthera, one of the Bahamas, is very informative as to the present condition of those islands commercially, and reveals an enthusiastic desire for union with Canada. The islands are at present shut out from the United States market by high duties. Should reciprocity be adopted they would, as part of Canada, be free of the United States market for the greater part of their products. This is a prospective feature of the change which has not occurred to our correspondent, who seems to place his hopes of trade regeneration in free commerce with what would in case of union be the rest of Canada. The Bahama problem is certainly a very interesting one, and will probably come up at an early date after the new parliament gets under way. It would, if nothing else, be a great advertisement for the islands thus to become a part of Canada.

The Evening Chit-Chat
By RUTH CAMERON

My small niece Rosalie had been kept awake several hours one night by a mosquito in her room.

In the morning her mother was comforting her, and armed with the witch hazel, was hunting for the little warrior's wings which seemed to be surprisingly few.

"Why, Rosalie," she finally objected, "he doesn't seem to have bitten you more than two or three times. I don't see how that could have kept you awake so long."

"But, mother," protested Rosalie, "he buzzed so. It wasn't what he did so much as what he acted as if he was going to do."

It seemed to me that poor, little, sleepy Rosalie quite unknowingly described an outlook on life that does more harm than all the other species of mental cross-eyedness put together.

For the most part, it isn't what our troubles do to us that makes us so unhappy. It's what they act as if they were going to do.

We could stand the few real attacks they make upon us, the few real injuries they inflict, if it were not for the attacks and injuries we think we are going to suffer.

Suppose you could see all the mental energy your possible troubles have cost you in one total, and that which your real troubles have taken out of you in another—would you think you would be the target?

The first I fancy, for most people don't fret at all about real troubles—they just endure them.

And remember this, all you who want to succeed in the business of life—and I suppose that is equivalent to saying everybody—who is constantly finding ghosts is seldom capable of fighting any of the real battles on the highroad to success, which require all a man or woman's full powers.

Buster Brown has a resolution on the subject of the needless unhappiness caused by the buzzing of that mosquito which seldom bites, which I'm sure you'll appreciate, whether you are a victim or not.

"Resolved," that worry is work. People who worry have got a life job with no pay envelope on Saturdays. Worry is crossing the bridge before you come to it, and while you're on it and after you're over. The sure way he never thinks about it, until he gets there and if the bridge is down he swims the creek. I guess we can't worry if we stop saying "if."

Buster Brown.

The British Ambassador to Austria — Reminiscences of the Powerful Crisp — His Home Troubles

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.)

Sir Fairfax Cartwright, the British Ambassador to Austria, who has been, during the last few weeks, the object of such bitter attacks in the German newspapers owing to his remarks criticising Germany's Munich policy made in a conversation with an Austrian journalist, Dr. Siegmund Manz, and published by the latter in the Vienna "Neue Freie Presse," is personally a man of the court, Emperor Francis Joseph, and in Viennese society.

He has a very strong strain of German blood in his veins. His grandfather, Sir Thomas Cartwright, who died as British minister plenipotentiary at Stockholm, in 1850, was married to Countess Marie von Sauttsell, daughter of the grand master of the court of King Maximilian II., of Bavaria. Sir Fairfax's own mother was a German, Fraulein Clementine Gaul, who had been the companion of the first wife of his father, William Cavendish Cartwright, of Aynho, Banbury.

The Cartwrights have been seated at Aynho ever since the days of Richard Cartwright, a successful lawyer, who bought the property early in the seventeenth century, and whose son married the daughter of the famous parliamentary general, the second Lord Fairfax, who commanded at Marston Moor. It is from this general that Sir Fairfax derives his Christian name.

When he was in Rome he married the youngest daughter of the Marchese Chigi, a member of that historic and princely house of the old Roman patricians and the head of which is hereditary marshal of the Holy Roman church and guardian of the papal conclaves, responsible as such for all the arrangements for the election of popes.

Through his wife and through his grandmother, Sir Fairfax is thus related not only to most of the great patrician houses of Rome, but likewise to many of the old families of the Austrian mediæval nobility, such as the Saxe-Wittgenstein, Thurn and Taxis, etc.

Not Worried Over Money

While minister at Munich, Sir Fairfax became a great favorite with the Bavarian royal family, especially with Prince and Princess Leopold, and of their sons and daughters, Princess Leopold being the eldest daughter of Emperor Francis Joseph. Indeed, it was the interest which Princess Leopold exercised in his behalf at Vienna that led her father, the emperor, to ask King Edward to have Sir Fairfax appointed an ambassador to his court.

Sir Fairfax is possessed of very ample means, that is to say, a very high allowance from his father, and this, together with the fact that he and his wife are Roman Catholics, renders his position among the diplomatic corps on the banks of the Danube of a very privileged character. Nor is it in the least degree probable that any demand will be made by them for his recall, although it cannot be denied that Sir Fairfax's foes did not hesitate to assert, in his relations with the press.

This is not the first time that he has made the mistake of imagining that he could make use of the continental press for political purposes without his own organs being betrayed and himself compromised thereby. Perhaps his tendency to take journalists into his confidence is due to the fact that he has done a good deal of writing himself, being the author of several tragedies, of review articles, and even one or two books. He has probably inherited his literary gifts from his father, who is the author of a very rich history of the Jesuits, and who for some time was the Liberal member for Oxfordshire.

The Powerful Crisp

Rome's action in giving the name of Crisp to one of its principal thoroughfares, without exciting any protest, but on the contrary, approval, even from those organs of the press which were most bitter against him during his lifetime, demonstrates the extraordinary revision which public sentiment has undergone in Italy towards King Humbert's all-powerful premier. In fact, the Italians as a whole seem to have at length reached the conclusion, formed long ago abroad, that Crisp was the greatest statesman projected by Italy in the nineteenth century. Crisp's countrymen have likewise ended by appreciating the fact that, in addition to being a statesman of international renown, he was also in every sense of the word a gentleman and a very chivalrous one at that, despite his origin.

The one great mistake which he made was his association with the woman who
