And with uneasy heart she crossed the bridge and walked on and on toward the cabin till she was close enough to detect the lines of care on her lover's haggard face. "Stop!" he called sharply. "Keep away! Why don't you obey me? Why don't you go back to the valley?" "Because I will now the same alone. 19c. each

"Because I will not leave you alon I can't! Please let me stay!" "I beg of you go back." "I beg of you go back."

The roar of the stream made it necessary, to speak loudly, and he could not put into his voice the tenderness he felt at the moment, but his face was knotted with pain as he asked, "Don't you see you add "to my unessiness—my paint."

"We've so emitous; about you," she answered. "It seems as though we should be doing something to help you."

He understood and was grateful for the tenderness which brought her so near to him, but he was forced to be Radfield named him. "He was a

the man?"

Reddeld named him. "He was a student under the chief, and the chief says he's all right, which entisties me.
Furthermore, he's a real-forester and not a political jobber or a corporation

"That's good," repeated Cavanagh, "and yet," he said sadly, "it leaves the chief out just the same." "No; the chief is not out. He's where he can fight-for the idea to bet-ter advantage than when he was a subordinate under another map. Anysubordinate under another man. Anyhow, he saks us all to line ap for the work and not to mind him. The work, he says, is bigger than any man. Here's that resignation of yeurs." he said, taking Cavanaghs letter from his pocket. December you are to take enarge of this forest in my stead. Eleanor has decided to take the children abroad for a couple of years, and as I am to be over there part of the time I don't feel justified in holding down the supervisor's position. I shall resign in your favor, wait now? he called warningly. "The district forester and I framed all this up as we rode down the hill yesterday, and it goes. Oh, yes, there's one thing more. Old man yes, there's one thing more. Old man Dunn"—

"How did you learn it?" "A reporter came boiling over the ridge about noon today wanting me to give him the names which Dunn had given me. I was strongly tempted to do as he asked me to-you know these newspaper men are sometimes the best kind of detectives for running down criminals—but on second thought I concluded to wait until I had discussed the matter with you. I haven't much faith in the county authorities." "Ordinarily I would have my doubts myself," replied Redfield, whole country is roused, and we're going to round up these men this time sure. The best men and the big papers all over the west are demanding an exercise of the law, and the re-ward we have offered"— He paused suddenly. "By the way, that reward will come to you if you can bring will come to you if you can bring about the arrest of the criminals."

"The reward should go to Dunn's family," replied the ranger soberly, "Poor chap, he's sacrificed himself for the good of the state."

"That's true. His family is left in bad shape"— Cavanagh broke off the conversation maddenia. "I must so heak to". He suddenly. "I must go back to"— He had almost said "back to Wetherford. "My patient needs me!" he exclaimed. "How does he seem?"

"He's surely dying. In my judg-pent he can't last the night, but so long as he's conscious it's up to me to be on the spot." Redfield walked slowly back across age of the ranger.
"It isn't the obvious kind of thing, but it's courage all the same," he said to himself. Meanwhile Lize and Virginia, left alone beside the fire, had drawn closer together.

The girl's face, so sweet and so pensive, wrought strongly upon the older woman's sympathy. Something of her own girlhood came back to her. Be-ing freed from the town and all its as-sociations, she became more considerate, more thoughtful. She wished to speak, and yet she found it very hard to begin. At last she said, with a touch of mockery in her tone, "You like Ross Cavanagh almost as well as
