AMONG THE SPORTS.

The Box.

There was a lively gathering of sports at the New York Club after the other afternoon to see a match made between John L. Sullivan and Jake Kilrain for the pugilistic championship of the world. Sullivan, assisted by Charles Johnson, of Brooklyn, Jack Barnitt and Dan Murphy of Boston, and Johnny Magee. The big crowd looked a little pale, but nearly as stalwart as of yore. Taking a seat in the chair of his fellow sporting editor, Charles Colvin, he awaited the arrival of Kilrain's representative, meanwhile shaking heads with dozens of admirers who followed him in from the street. About 20 o'clock news was brought that it was impossible that Richard K. Fox would send any one to represent Kilrain, and a challenge to Kilrain and back it up with a good round fight. Charles Johnson handed $200 to the Clippier editor. While he was consulting Mr. Lumsley and Germain of the Illustrated News entered and Sullivan's challenge was as follows: "I will fight Jake Kilrain to fight me according to the latest rules of the London prize ring for the sum of $100,000 a side, or as much more as he would like to make it, the fight to take place six months after the signing of the contract, and to be fought at the Clippier Club. I have this day placed in the hands of the sporting editor of the Clippier the sum of $200 as a guarantee of my good faith (Signed) JOHN L. SULLIVAN, Champion of the World."

Before leaving the Clippier office Sullivan stated that if Kilrain could whip him, he could make the biggest pile of money he had ever made. "I think I will accept the offer," said Sullivan. "I know what you can whip me if I had one leg in the game."
