A BIRDS WING.

[St. Nicholas.]

Did you ever look at a b wing carefully and try to out out from it the way which it is used? People ally suppose, either that a flies because it is lighter t air, like a baloon, or that it r itself along as a boat is ro through the water. Neithe these suppositions is true. bird is not lighter than the nor does it float; for whe bird is shot on the wing it to the ground just as quickl the squirrel. On the contr a bird flies on its own wei and could not fly at all i were not heavier than the

Look at a quill-feather, you will see that on each of the central shaft or quill,t is a broad, thin portion, whic called vane. The vane on side of the shaft is quite br and flexible, while that on other side is narrow and s and by looking at a wing w the feathers in their places, will find that they are placed that they overlap a little,like slats on a window blind. E broad vane runs under the r row vane of the feather bes it, so that, when the wing moved downward, each feat is pressed up against the s narrow vane of the one besid and the whole wing forms solid sheet like the blinds w the slats closed. After the do stroke is finished and the stroke begins, the pressur taken off from the lower sur of the wing, and begins to on the upper surface and press the feathers downw instead of upward. The br vanes now have nothing to s port them, and they bend do and allow the air to p through the wing,which is n like a blind with the slats o By these two contrivances— shape of the wing,and the sh and arrangement of the feath —the wing resists the air on down-stroke and raises the b a little at each flap, but at e up..stroke allows the air to s off at the sides, and to p through between the feath so that nothing is lost.
